govern the rise and fall of market values, as they do the ebb and flow of the tides. To be successful on Wall Street, barring accident or luck in one's calculations, one should be familiar with the various phenomena thus affecting fluctuations. Our handsome, cloth bound, illustrated 400 page "Guide to Investors," which we publish for free distribution, contains exhaustive analysis of conditions, which govern values, presented in such manner as to be clear to any reader. The book also contains complete information relative to every security that is dealt in upon the Exchanges, range, rules for trading and prices for the past ten to thirty years. Those who have read this work are better qualified to deal successfully, than those who have not. Will you allow us to present you with a copy, also to mail you free our "Daily Market Letter." We feel confident it will be to your interest to do so.

The English Telephone System

The British isles are in an exceedingly fortunate position as regards telephone and telegraph systems, inasmuch as these are in the hands of the government, and are not controlled as private monopolies, as in Canada, for the benefit of shareholders.

The management in England is under the Post Office Department. It has been the policy of the British government, with regard to the telephone system, to itself operate the trunk lines, those between towns and cities, but to give to companies, of which the National Telephone company is the most important, the right to operate local systems within the towns and cities, these to be connected with the government system for "long distance" use.

Two municipalities, Tunbridge Wells and Glasgow, have just broken away still further from company control of the telephone, and municipal systems have been installed. This has not, however, been accomplished without a struggle, and the companies are combatting the new movement by reducing their rates.

The opening of the Tunbridge Wells system was made on July 27th last. The local area has been enlarged to bring in a number of villages, and extends 12 miles from north to south and 17 miles from east to west. For unlimited speech, day and night, the charge is [illegible] per year, and to suit the purposes of those whose requirements are only for a limited number of outward calls, there is a [illegible] rental plus 1d per call, or [illegible] plus 1d. per outward call. The total number of lines in use will be about [illegible] to commence with.

The Glasgow municipal system was formally opened on August [illegible]. [illegible] that day, orders on the [illegible] for [illegible] instruments to be installed, but provision for the future will give accommodation in the switch room for [illegible] subscribers. As with Tunbridge Wells, the area covered extends beyond the corporation limits, including [illegible].

The rates to be charged in Glasgow are [illegible] yearly for an unlimited number of calls, [illegible] per annum, and [illegible] for each call, [illegible] this payment being for [illegible] only.

A [illegible] feature of the service given by these corporations is the superior class of telephone instruments used, also the provision made for the [illegible] service. The Tunbridge Wells system is especially complete, and so [illegible] that a conversation cannot be overheard by an operator at the central office; connections can be made with very little delay, and when it is desired to "hold the line" two telephones may even be replaced temporarily without danger of being cut off.

The patents of the Bell Telephone Company having expired in Canada, a few independent lines have been installed, one at [illegible], and several farmers' lines in the [illegible] peninsula. An agitation has been carried on in Toronto for [illegible] a municipal or independent telephone company to compete with the Bell Co., but action is necessarily slow in opposing well-established interests. The use of the telephone has heretofore been largely curtailed by excessive charges, but there is every likelihood that, in the near future, it will be universally regarded as one of the "modern conveniences" belonging to every house. To this end a reduction of rates is necessary, and if the history of other monopolies is of guidance, this can only be accomplished in the first instance, by competition, or public control.—Municipal World.

Hard on Municipal Government

BOBCAYGEON Independent:—The city of Toronto is the metropolis of Ontario. It is the seat of the Ontario Parliament, and is commonly known as the City of Churches. It is ruled by a municipal government elected by the people. Such being the case Toronto may be taken as a fair sample of the results attained by a government by the people for the people. What about gambling dens and houses of ill fame? Is the city ruled carefully and [illegible]? Does it owe many millions of dollars of debt? Does it spend a revenue as large as that of the whole Provincial Government? There are lots of other questions which might be asked, but perhaps the best illustration of the results of government by the people for the people in Toronto is seen in their management of the public welcome to the Duke of York. To show what is called "loyalty" they decorated the streets of the city, and erected arches, and had illuminations, and spent a heap of money. That money they borrowed. Their "loyalty" did not lead them to pay the cost of their own pockets. They now propose to issue debentures to meet the expenses of the Duke of York's visit, and those debentures will run for a series of years. They will have to be met, if they are issued, by the next generation. The Toronto people spend a large sum of money in rejoicing and keeping holiday and they leave their children to pay the bill. That is Toronto government by the people for the people. Great Scott! Save us from such a government. This journal, if you please, would prefer a nice comfortable despotism. Rather than such government by the people for the people it would chose a military Emperor. Taking Toronto as a sample of government by the people for the people this journal would rather have anarchy, or nihilism, or prelacy, or aristocracy, or Christian Science, or anything. The government of Toronto by the people for the people has made government by the people ridiculous.

Anecdotal.

The following anecdote is told by Andrew Lang in "Longman's:" Mr. M. of —— was out in the Forty-five. He was taken, and was being brought to the Tower with Kilmarnock and Balmerino. A block stopped the sad cortege, and a lady, looking from a window, cried: "You tall rebel!" (Mr. M was six feet four) "you will soon be shorter by a head!" "Does that give you pleasure, madame?" said Mr. M. "Yes, it does." "Then, madame," said Mr. M., taking off his hat and making a low bow, "I do not die in vain.".

A writer in the San Francisco "Argonaut" spoils a good story in this wise: Pauline Bonaparte Borghese, Napoleon I.'s younger sister, posed entirely nude to Canova, and it is said that she remarked, when asked if she did not feel cold without drapery: "No, the room was kept warm by a stove." The real story, according to the "Critic," is that a friend, who was very much shocked when she heard what Pauline had done, exclaimed, "How could you do such a thing!" To which the Princess replied, with a shrug of her beautiful shoulders, "It was nothing—the room was warm."

One day, just as Pere Monsabre, the celebrated Dominican preacher of the Cathedral of Notre Dame, Paris, was preparing to ascend the pulpit, a message came to him that a lady wanted to see him who was worried about an affair of conscience. After much waste of time she came to the point. She was given up to vanity. That very morning, she confessed, she had looked in her looking-glass and yielded to the temptation of thinking herself pretty. Pere Monsabre looked at her and said, quietly: "Is that all?" "That's all." "Well, my child," he replied, "you can go away in peace, for a mistake is not a sin."

The story is told of three Protestant ladies who walked into a Roman Catholic church in Ireland during high mass. It was raining and they had gone in for shelter. The priest, one of nature's gentlemen, recognized the ladies, and, stooping down, said to an attendant: "Three chairs for the Protestant ladies." It was a kindly thought, but the priest must have wished he had never thought it when the man stood up in the church and shouted: "Three cheers for the Protestant ladies!" It was over in a minute—the cheers were cheered and could not be called back; but it was one of the most uncomfortable moments in the good priest's life.

Herbert Spencer, the great English sociologist and philosopher, is very fond of a game of billiards, and the other day at the Reform Club in London he met an acquaintance whom he invited to play with him. The young member accepted, and Spencer said joyfully, as he chalked his cue: "Young man, good billiard-playing is the proof of a well-balanced mind." "I believe it is," replied the young man. They played and the great writer was beaten fearfully. He had only scored thirty-eight when his young antagonist finished his one hundred. Herbert Spencer put the cue away in disgust. "Young man," he said, "such fine billiard-playing as yours is the proof of an ill-spent youth."

General O. O. Howard, who commanded one of the wings of Sherman's army on the famous march to the sea, and who bore Lee's first shock at Gettysburg, was once interviewed on the subject of answers to prayer. In his famous fight with Stonewall Jackson the Union forces were defeated, so he was asked: "You prayed before that battle?" "Yes," he answered. "And Jackson was a praying man. He prayed also?" "Yes," he assented. "Then how was it he gained the victory? Did that mean that the Union cause was wrong?" Very gently the good old general replied: "Both our prayers were answered. Jackson prayed for immediate victory and I for the ultimate triumph of our cause. We both got what we prayed for."

Mark Twain had a peculiar experience when he attended his first great London banquet, at which there were between eight hundred and nine hundred guests. "The lord mayor, or somebody, read out a list of the chief guests before we began to eat," he says. "When he came to prominent names the other guests would applaud. I found the man next me rather a good talker. Just as we got to an interesting subject there was a tremendous clapping of hands. I had hardly ever heard such applause before. I straightened up and set to clapping with the rest, and I noticed a good many people round about me fixing their attention on me, and some of them laughing in a friendly and encouraging way. I moved about in my chair, and clapped louder than ever. 'Who is it?' I asked the gentleman on my right. 'Samuel Clemens, better known in England as Mark Twain,' he replied. I stopped clapping. The life seemed to go out of me. I never was in such a fix in all my days."

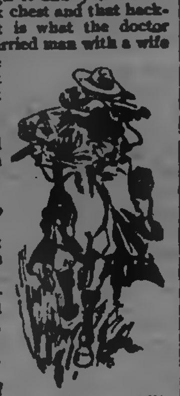
"Go West,



Rough it and rough it and you'll soon get rid of that weak chest and that hacking cough." That is what the doctor said to a young married man with a wife and child to care for and a modest salary to support them on. He couldn't go West. Love and duty tied him to his desk in the city.

People don't have to travel to cure coughs or strengthen weak lungs. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures obstinate, deep-seated coughs, bronchitis, bleeding of the lungs, weakness, emaciation and other forms of disease which if neglected or unskillfully treated terminate fatally in consumption.

"I will write you what Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has done for me," says George H. Belcher, Esq., of Dorton, Pike County, Ky. "Thirteen years ago I was wounded by a ball passing through my lung. I have had a bad cough almost ever since, with shortness of breath, and it was very easy to take cold; the slightest change of weather would cause the cough to be so bad I would have to sit up in bed all night. Could not eat or sleep at times; was all run down; could not work at all. A few months ago I began using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Have not used more than two bottles, and now can eat, sleep, and work, and I feel like a new man. I cannot find words to sufficiently recommend Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, or tell the good it has done me."

RELIEF.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-size bottle."

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER

Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO.:

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows at 130th street, New York. I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the 1st of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully,

O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle and I am ever grateful. I have a family of four children and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

Her spirits rose as she walked quickly, getting away from the works as fast as she could, and Carlo frisked along gayly by her side. When she got outside the old walls she stopped.

"I shall have time to get to Fraser's Mine and back before breakfast," she said, consulting her watch; "the air is so lovely there."

So on she went, getting swiftly out of the noise of the works and the smoke of the town, till she came to a rough, open common, across which a faint soft breeze was blowing.

As Katharine walked, her mind was busy with the future.

"With my fifty pounds I could never starve," she determined, "and daddy always said that I had a fortune in my pen —it might have been his love that prompted him to say it, poor darling, but, after all, he knew the world —and even if things did go badly I would rather rough it, face any troubles, than live near Gordon Smythe. I must be careful not to hurt Cousin Lucy's feelings; she must ——" but here Katharine's musings were interrupted by a series of sharp shrill barks from Carlo, who was standing sniffing at something with his ears pricked and body erect.

The girl whistled to him, but finding the dog mutinous, she moved nearer.

"It is a drunken man," she thought with a shudder, and calling louder to Carlo, she was about to turn, when her eye caught a glimpse of the face lying half-buried in the stubby grass.

The next moment she was standing beside the sleeping form, gazing down at it in tender pity.

"So this was his arrangement, was it?" she murmured. "Poor fellow — poor boy!"

Katharine was barely nineteen herself, but she had grown accustomed to consider herself a woman, and in her sight this young stranger was quite a boy. "How tired he is, his eyes are quite dark underneath with fatigue. Poor fellow, how I wish I knew what was troubling him; shall I wake him and ask him? He — he came to find Gordon." Katharine half stooped down, and then drew back her hand. "No," she said to herself, "I will let him sleep on, he seems worn out; when I go back I will tell Gordon where I have seen him, and perhaps rouse him to some sense of duty."

"My heart misgives me," she murmured, as she passed on and left the sleeper undisturbed.

This unexpected incident robbed her walk of all its pleasures. It was strange how she could not rid her mind of the feeling that this young man was in some danger, and that she ought to shield him. That some very urgent motive had brought him down to Ledstone in a penniless condition —else why, if he had money, should he be sleeping in the open fields? —Katharine was certain now and a cold shiver passed through her as she recalled her cousin's unexpected arrival home, and his anger —repeated to her by Sarah —at the fact that he had been followed by this stranger.

Thinking deeply, Katharine walked on till she reached the curious old, ruined works called Fraser's Mine. About ten years previously some unwary individual had gone to the enormous expense of sinking a shaft and getting all the paraphernalia necessary for the production of coal. Unfortunately coal refused to be produced, and the result of the speculation was utter and complete ruin for the originator. The pecuniary part of the affair had passed into Chancery, and there it remained, while the mine was allowed to fall into decay and ruin as fast as it liked. Katharine had a strange fancy for this desolate place; she often brought her pen and paper here, and wrote hard at the stories which no one but herself knew existed. There was not much fear of interruption, for the factory folk did not care about the spot, and with one voice declared it haunted; but Katharine had a supreme contempt for ghosts and all spectres, and enjoyed her solitude immensely.

Arrived at her favorite corner— a portion sheltered by huge, moss-covered beams, from behind which, a few yards beyond, could be caught a glimpse of the dark, uncovered mouth of the pit— she sat down to think, and, tired with the long, hot walk, and the unusual exertion of rising so early, the girl gradually lost the troubled train of her thought in a soft, deep sleep; Carlo, curled up at her feet, following her example.

From a curious, mixed dream, Katharine was awakened suddenly by heavy raindrops falling on her face, and a loud clap of thunder rolling over her head. She had been asleep an hour, and in that time the morning glory had gone and the sky had grown gray and stormy.

"Come, Carlo, we must get under shelter," she said, rising quickly, and running into a shed that had once been the foreman's room, Katharine prepared to wait patiently for the storm to clear. She felt tired and heavy, as one often does after a sleep in the open air, and was passing her hand over her eyes and wishing vaguely that she was back at Rose Cottage, when she started violently, and grew first rosy red and then pale again. Just to her right, sheltered by a jutting portion of old woodwork, were two men.

She knew them in a moment; there was no mistaking Gordon's smart Bond street cut clothes, and Katharine had a vivid recollection of the light tweed suit worn by the other.

It was evident they had run sharply to escape the rain, for both were breathless, and that might have accounted for the singular pallor and anger that was written on Gordon Smythe's face.

"This is better!" Katharine heard the young stranger exclaim; she could catch every syllable uttered quite easily. "By Jove! isn't it coming down!"

The other waited a few moments, then half-impatiently, half-eagerly, he said:

"Well, Smythe, what's your answer?"

Gordon turned on him savagely.

"What do you mean by hunting me in this way, curse you!" he muttered fiercely.

The other laughed shortly.

"Come, don't lose your temper, old fellow. I confess it is rather hard lines on you to be dragged out of your bed so early in the morning. But, when I'm in such a hole I am obliged to be troublesome. You know I told you in that note I sent you last night, when I suddenly discovered you were in Ledstone after all, that you could choose your own hour. So it was your fault, not mine, that you picked on such an uncomfortable one to yourself!"

"Curse you!" was Gordon's only reply.

"Take care! Curses come home to roost!"

Katharine was trembling in every limb. Should she make her presence known, or should she try and steal away without being seen? Even while she thought this, Gordon moved a few steps nearer her hiding place, and the young fellow following, they came to a standstill just before the doorway, and her exit was blocked.

Katharine could see the veins swollen on Gordon's brows, and the expression written on his face sent a thrill of dread through her.

"You've come on a wild goose chase, my friend," he said in quick, husky tones.

"That remains to be seen," was the answer given promptly, and with a flush of indignation. "Upon my word, Smythe, you take a very curious tone; one would think, to hear you, that I had come to beg or steal! All I ask you is a fair question and fair dealing— when are you going to settle up our debt?— when shall I have my money back? Only give me some sort of definite answer— some idea of when you will repay me— then we can part forever. Heaven knows I want nothing more to do with you; you have done me enough harm. I have lost my berth through you; got discredited through you, and now am penniless through you!"

A tear started to either blue eye, and went straight to Katharine's heart. She drew back involuntarily against the wall as the young man went on, throwing out his hands with a despairing gesture:

"Do you know I have tramped every bit of the road from London to find you, Smythe? It is just by luck I heard you telling Mason you were coming down here. It isn't for myself I am worrying you, but—but that money is not all mine; half of it by rights belongs to my sister— my poor little sister!— who is dependent upon me for her very life! Had it not been that you swore the money would be doubled before——"

"That's enough! I know the whole story, it is not necessary to recapitulate it," Gordon broke in curtly; then turning sharply round: "Look here, Adair; I came out this morning to end the matter once and for all. I have not a shilling I can call my own in the world; and if I had, I should not give it to you. If you were fool enough to risk all you had in speculation— well, am I to be responsible? Good Heavens!— I should have enough to do if I accepted such a state of things! I don't care a curse whether you are penniless or not— it is nothing to me! All I know is that you are devilish impertinent, and a bore! and the sooner you leave off worrying me, the better. You are big and strong enough; surely you can find work to keep your sister, if you don't want to see her starve. But let me give you this piece of advice— don't think to sponge on me; I'm not to be controlled by whines or threats! The rain has stopped, so I'll say 'good-morning!'"

"You blackguard!" he exclaimed in choked tones. "You contemptible scoundrel! That such as you should bear the name of man! Ah! how I despise myself for ever having called you friend! You, a common thief, a——"

Gordon looked at him steadily.

"Don't tempt me too far, Adair," he said in a curiously quiet way. "Don't do it, I say, or you may repent it!"

With a smothered exclamation Craven Adair clenched his fist, and for answer struck the other a quick, strong blow; the full force of his wrong had come upon him and maddened him, and in another instant the two men had closed and were struggling together fiercely, panting and straining every nerve to gain the mastery.

Katharine turned suddenly cold and sick; for one moment she trembled so much she could not move; her eyes were glued on the hideous sight; but as the faintness passed she roused herself wildly and staggered out into the air. In one glance she saw the situation.

"Gordon! Gordon!" she cried hoarsely. "Gordon— ah!" the word ended in a scream that was echoed by another given shrilly from the mouth of the old pit.

As the girl had rushed out of her hiding place, the two men had worked in their struggle to the very verge of the abyss. Weakened by fatigue and want of food, poor Craven Adair was as nothing in Gordon Smythe's strong, cruel hands; he felt himself urged backward and backward, a sickening sense of helplessness appalling him, a torrent of abuse and oaths poured into his ears, then a momentary vision of that lovely face that had haunted him all night passed before his eyes like the face of an imploring angel, and then — Gordon Smythe was leaning against one of the stout beams alone on the edge of the pit. A cold sweat was on his face; he shook in every limb; his eyes glared down into the yawning chasm whose darkness had swallowed up that good honest heart, that fair young face, that stalwart form.

How long he stood thus Gordon never knew. Suddenly he started with a smothered shriek; a cold hand had seized him as in an iron grip, and some one was beside him. It was Katharine.

"You have killed him! — killed him!" she muttered, in a voice almost choked with horror and emotion "I—I saw him go, sent by your hand —he screamed as he went. I hear him now," with a shiver through every limb, her grasp tightened convulsively on the man. "Gordon, you must save him —save him, do you not understand?"

But Gordon Smythe had forgotten all but himself and his own danger, which her presence suddenly recalled; in a perfect frenzy of fear he was on the ground clasping her knees.

"Katharine, it was a mistake!" he gasped. "I —I swear it! You will not give me up now, Katharine? Katharine, you must save me! They will hang me for this if— if you utter a word you will ——"

Katharine shook him off as she would have shaken off a rat.

"Coward!" she said, in tones of unfathomable loathing and contempt. Then she tried to move, to bend over the pit, her heart bursting with the awful sense of horror, of helplessness that came over her. He was lying there dead, crushed, mangled; it was too horrible!

She looked down at the man clinging to her skirts like a child, every scrap of self-reliance and mental restraint gone, pleading to her to help him to save his life.

"Save you!" she said, her voice hoarse from the horror; "go, I will have nothing more to say to you. Murderer, go!"

But Gordon clung to her still more fiercely.

"They will condemn me on your word, Katharine, do you not see? I— oh, Heaven help me, I shall be hanged!" Great beads of perspiration burst out on his face. "Mother!" he muttered weakly; "my mother! Oh, what shall I do?"

Katharine stood with one hand on her heart and one pressed to her parched throat; her ear was strained to catch a moan or cry from that awful tomb, but none came, no sound broke the air, only the wild, frenzied pleadings and the hoarse gaspings for breath of the man at her feet.

"Stand up!" she said, turning on him suddenly; "do not kneel to me, kneel to your God for help."

Gordon clutched despairingly at her hand.

"They will make you give evidence against me," he muttered, huskily, his mind dwelling only on his own fearful danger. "They will condemn me, hang me, on your word! Katharine, you must save me! you must, for my mother's sake!"

The girl started. She had forgotten the mother in this terrible moment. She could think of nothing but that frank young face, so still and cold forever; hear nothing but that shrill scream as he had sunk to his ghastly grave, pushed there by Gordon's treacherous hand.

"What —what can I do? Heaven have mercy on us! Heaven have mercy on us!" she murmured faintly; her brain was reeling; she half moved, half staggered away.

Gordon dragged himself after her on his knees.

"You can save me if you will, Katharine," he said, eagerly, wildly, his bloodshot eyes moving round in a distraught way; "you alone saw this —this done! You alone can condemn me! A wife can give no evidence against her husband! You must be my wife, Katharine, for —for my mother's sake!"

CHAPTER III.

"Your wife!"

The words fell from Katharine's ashen lips in a dull, dead sort of way; then with almost superhuman strength she wrenched her skirts from his hands, and recoiled from him as from some hideous reptile. She had no words ready to express the tumult of feelings that thronged her breast.

With swift, trembling steps she approached that dark chasm again, and bent over it.

All was deathly still. Not a moan or sigh came to her ear. Katharine looked about her in an agonized way. If she could but go down there and discover if a spark of life still lingered! In the full terror of the past few moments she had been too stunned to think of succoring him; now every nerve in her body was quivering. She felt if something were not done she must go mad. Turning suddenly, she saw Gordon still on his knees beside her.

"Quick!" she said, almost fiercely. "Quick! We have delayed too long! He —he may not be dead —we must do something. Instead of crying to me for your paltry life, Gordon Smythe, arouse yourself and think of your victim."

The tones —cold, curt as they were —did not rouse the craven cur at her feet, did not move his mind from his own fear.

"He is dead —dead!" he whispered, plucking at her gown again and shuddering: "what creature could live down there? Katharine, don't stare in that way —don't, for Heaven's sake! I can't bear it!"

"Are you, then, such a pitiful coward that my eyes frighten you?"

Katharine's face was ghastly white, but it was wonderfully beautiful in its supreme scorn.

There was a moment's silence between them, then her strength suddenly went. She felt a wave of acute, horrible fear sweep over her.

"Let me go!" she murmured, shivering from him; "release me — let me go! I—I cannot bear your touch. I cannot——"

She pressed one hand over her throbbing eyes, but the vision of that frank, handsome young face vanishing into the black darkness still glared at her to torture her.

"Yes, go—go!" he muttered huskily; "go quickly and send out those who will search for the dead man and capture his murderer. It is my due; my hands are stained with his blood; it is life for life. What does it matter whether my mother's heart is broken? I have sinned and I must suffer; it is but just. They will condemn me on your word, Katharine Brereton, and I shall be hanged by the neck till I am dead."

Katharine's hands dropped, and her eyes went round in a confused, terrified way, while her breath came in quick, short gasps.

Gordon crept nearer to her.

"Think of my mother, Katharine, the woman who has lavished a mother's love on you, who loves you as her own child; think of her shame, her agony, when I am condemned by your word, and——"

The girl stopped him.

"I—I cannot stay here. I shall go mad!" she cried, wildly. "For Heaven's sake, take —take——"

The words died away in a broken sob, and, as she staggered back feebly, Gordon Smythe sprang to his feet and caught her in his arms.

For one instant she lay in his hold quite motionless, but nothing so merciful as oblivion was granted to the girl. As her eyes opened again, and she realized whose arm was supporting her, she started up with a shudder of deep, unutterable repugnance.

The thunderstorm had completely disappeared; overhead the sky was as blue and cloudless as when she had started for her early walk. It seemed to her, in her nervous, distraught condition, as though nature had been warned of the hideous tragedy that had taken place, and sent its awe-inspiring thunder and vivid lightning to protest against it.

Gordon watched her sullenly, though his fear increased every moment, as she stood with her eyes covered, trembling from head to foot. He had been in too many awkward situations not to be able to rally his forces when a crisis came, and he was fast growing himself again, but for the uncontrollable dread of what would happen to him in the future if this were discovered. There was very little remorse in his heart over his murderous work; it was of himself he thought; and his blood ran cold at the bare shadow of the horrible fate awaiting him if this girl did not come to his rescue.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING

COCOA

BREAKFAST—SUPPER

In Katharine alone lay his safeguard.

His quick, cunning brain worked on, planning and seeing every difficulty. Fate, or the luck the devil is supposed to find for his children, was singularly kind to him. Craven Adair was not known by a single person in Ledstone or the country round; he had not even taken a lodging for the night; so his disappearance would never be remarked. Fraser's Mine —as has been said— stood absolutely alone and desolate, and even supposing that prying eyes came about the place— well, determined Gordon, with a shudder, the dark pit would guard its secret well— the dead man at the bottom was safely tombed.

Few people had met him in his quick walk, through the town, to keep the interview he had written Adair to expect, and if they had, what more natural than that he should have followed his cousin to escort her in her morning's constitutional before breakfast?

All this flashed in swiftness through his brain; but, comforting as it was, his lips twitched nervously and his heart beat with sickening dread as he gazed at the girl's blanched, terrified face.

She was his last—his only chance! He set his teeth fiercely and choked down an oath. Would she save him, or would she set the police on him, and have him hunted like a dog? The bare suggestion made him quiver like a leaf, and at the moment Katharine seemed to wake from the semi-trance into which she had fallen, and looking about her with a hurried, fearful glance, she began to walk away; the dog Carlo, who was shivering as if he understood some awful thing had happened, following her with a low whine of pleasure at leaving the place.

Gordon's breath came quick and fast; in two strides he was beside her.

"Katharine," he said, in tones so full of fear and excitement as to be almost inaudible, "where are you going?"

"I must go away from here; away," she murmured half vacantly. "Let me pass."

But he gripped her two hands in his.

"You are going home— home to my mother, to sit down quietly and see my ruin. Katharine, have you no heart —no pity? I tell you that my life is in danger— that—I am in your hands! You must speak! Katharine, you will save me— you must save me! I am a desperate man!"

She lifted her wonderful gray eyes to his face.

"Why should I save you?" she broke out swiftly. "Why should you not die as you have made him die? No, no!" Her voice grew choked and hoarse. "I—I can have nothing to do with you. I—"

"Then you will see my mother die —for how will she live when I am gone?— without lifting a hand to help her?" Gordon's face was white to the lips. Time was flying, and there was not a moment to be lost. Before night came on, she and he must be far from here— he would not breathe in comfort till he had left Ledstone far far behind, and had Katharine secure in his grasp.

Katharine stood for a moment gazing at him. A strange calm had come upon her.

"Go on," she said curtly; "tell me what you wish me to do."

All at once a vision of the mother's sweet, sad face had come before her eyes; the memory of Lucy Smythe's devotion, idolatry, rose to her mind; the remembrance of the many thousand acts of womanly love she had received surged in her heart. What was it he said?

This mother would die if he were gone, and she, Katharine, alone could avert that.

Over and over again she said this to herself, in a dull, mechanical way, while Gordon poured out a string of words— appeals, entreaties, prayers— in a fearful, low, hurried manner, that dimly roused a feeling of contemptible pity in her breast.

She looked down as he paused, then, in a quiet, clear voice, she said:

"Come with me!"

Gordon's bloodshot eyes moved nervously.

"What— what are you going to do?" he whispered, shrinking back.

For Katharine had walked straight up to the mouth of that black abyss that was poor Craven Adair's last resting place.

"Come," she repeated gently, and stretching out her hand she dragged him to her side— for his strength seemed to give way beneath the perfect agony of fear that swept over him. "Now swear," she said passionately; "swear over his grave that if I become your wife, you will leave me utterly alone; you will never come near me, or dare to approach me for a single moment. Swear, I say!"

The man's face was ashen white, and great beads of cold perspiration stood out on his brow. Like all cowards, this close contact with the scene of his crime perfectly unhinged him; but still his mind did not neglect himself. Hurriedly, in thick, muttered words, he took the oath she demanded, averting his gaze from that horrible pit which seemed to him to be full of hundreds of eyes fixed hungrily upon him at every point.

When he had finished, Katharine threw off his hand.

"Now, leave me," she said faintly. "I accept the sacrifice, Gordon Smythe. I will be your wife, since by that I can save you from shame and death; but I do not do it for you! The vilest reptile that crawls is not more loathsome to me than you are. It is for your mother's sake alone I do this, so that she may never know that her son whom she loves and honors so well is nothing more than a scoundrel, a thief and a murderer! Go, I have given you my word, and I will not draw back. Make what plans you like, I will agree to them, but —but do not come near me too often, or my strength, my resolution may fail me at the last moment, and I may shrink from taking a husband with [illegible]

A Famous Name.

The recent death of Dr. Charles Lempriere, senior fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, recalls a famous name. Dr. Lempriere was the son of the Rev. John Lempriere, well known as the author of the celebrated "Classical Dictionary." Lempriere the younger was called to the bar in 1844, and was contemporary and occupied the same chamber with the late Lord Chief Justice Cockburn. He went the Western Circuit with Sir John Karslake and Lord Chief Justice Coleridge for some years. Subsequently Dr. Lempriere was appointed Colonial Secretary of the Bahamas, and was entrusted by the Governments of the day with several important missions abroad.

Dr. Lempriere also undertook on one occasion a special mission to Mexico at the instance of the late Sir Moses Montefiore, and he was also interested in various immigration schemes in Virginia and elsewhere. He wrote largely for the press, both in New York and London, and was a frequent contributor to The Times on various questions of interest recording his experiences in the various parts of the world which had been visited by him

The East and the West.

The western editor of The El Dorado Republican rises on general principles to remark, and his language is plain :—

"Of the forty million people who live east of the line drawn from north to south through the centre of Indiana, thirty-nine million of them believe that thirty-nine million of the forty million who live west of that line are a coarse, unlettered, uncombed and unwashed people, who feed on hog, hominy and prairie hay, live in clapboard houses and on dirt floors, sleep on straw beds, eat in the kitchen with their fingers, have cockle burrs in their hair, go to the horse races on Sundays and shoot each other on sight. They believe all this, and much more, because they themselves are untravelled and ignorant, because they are narrow, prejudiced and provincial to the thirty-third degree, and because they have been taught from the beginning that everything coarse, common and vulgar finds willing worshippers in the brutal, uncivilised west.

"Eastern newspapers teach and preach it; eastern magazines, whose pages are usually filled with the insipid drivel of the Q. Milsop Podgeiser, the Jane Spindleshank Soap-suds class of writers, revel in picturing everything from the west as cranky, sensual and unworthy of any sort of notice except beastly caricature, and yet, taking one mile square right under the noses of those skimmilk writers, there is more crime, more debauchery, more drunkenness, more of all that is vile and brutal, than can be found in the vast area lying west of the Indiana line.

"The eastern lobsters who are forever reviling the west, and have no more knowledge of this country than has a Digger Indian of a mahogany seat in the New Jerusalem, are as narrow as a clothesline, and as stupid as they are ignorant. There is more patriotism, more love of country and of the flag, more real manhood and womanhood, more love of the beautiful and true in any one western State than can be found in an entire string of States along the Atlantic coast.

"The west apes nothing, parrots nothing, and accepts no goggle-eyed chimpanzee's declarations as its standard of business or social ethics; nor does it fall on its stomach and sing paeans when its snobocracy passes down the street. The west is a law unto itself, and that its business and social and political ideas are placed upon a more honorable, truthful and manly pedestal than those of any other people goes without saying. The west knows the east from A to Izzard—knows all its washed-out, half-baked ideas of what constitutes polite society, and is charitable enough to forgive it in its honest regard of the brotherhood of man, but it doesn't forget the chattering magpies, who, while hoisting the black flag, drool their senile rot through all the eastern publications in condemnation of everything and everybody west of the Indiana line.

"And we recall that one-half of all this rancid so-called fine writing is done by long-haired 'literary fellers' whose practical knowledge of the world is as circumscribed as is the environment in which they rattle around while stringing words together at so much per string, and by short-haired grannies, who, if they could have their way, would not let a man live anywhere north of the equator, we feel like hoisting the black flag in return and keeping it hoisted until the owners or managers of these eastern publications banish the entire tribe of Puritanical warts to the Antipodes."

His Own "Boots."

"I've been having the time of my life, I tell you," said the suburbanite gloomily to his city friend at lunch.

"What's the matter? Pipes burst? Furnace won't work? Dog killing the neighbor's chickens?" asked the friend, sympathetically running through the list of the suburbanite's usual grievances.

"No, worse than that," sadly answered the first speaker. "I've been having an English friend visit me. It's years since I've been across the water, so one or two of his ways were a little strange. The worst of his doings was what has broken me up so. He went to bed the first night before the rest of us, and when I came along the corridor an hour or so later there were his shoes standing outside his door, and frightfully muddy, too.

"I looked at them in astonishment. Then I remembered the English custom of having the boy come up for the boots. We keep only two servants, you know, both women, and, of course, in the country you have to rub them the right way or they'll leave. I knew perfectly well that if I told either of those free and independent Irishwomen to clean the Englishman's shoes we'd be left servantless, and that would have been the death of my wife.

"I lifted the shoes gingerly by two fingers and carried them to my room. When I thought the servants must be asleep, I crept downstairs and got to work with a brush. At every sound I would nearly jump out of my boots and drop his. I fancied every moment that the girls would see my candle and give the alarm of burglars, or that my friend would be taken ill and get up and find me brushing his shoes. Oh, I had a pretty time of it. He stayed a week, that Englishman, and what with loss of sleep and overstrained nerves, I'm a wreck."

"Well, why on earth didn't you have the moral courage to——"

"Moral courage! I'd like to see the man who'd have the moral courage to tell an English gentleman with a monocle that the ways of even well-bred people in this country differ from those he's been accustomed to! My friend, you do not know the breed." And he drowned his sorrows and braced his nerves with a second cup of unquestionable coffee.

A school inspector, having a few minutes to spare after examining the school, put a few questions to the lower form boys on the common objects in the schoolroom.

"What is the use of that map?" he asked, pointing to one stretched across the corner of the room; and half a dozen shrill voices answered, in measured articulation:

Benefit of Harry Lindley

Harry Lindley, Canada's popular comedian, who dates back to the period of the old Music Hall on the market, and who has since then intermittently provided food for laughter, up to the present day, has of late, been meeting serious set backs in his chequered career, and a large number of his Peterborough friends have offered him a benefit on Monday evening next.

No fewer than thirty of our own local favorites have kindly tendered their assistance. "Little Myrtle" daughter of Mr. Lindley will appear here for the first time in the "Bugaboo;" and also give some cake walk absurdities. Beetle Netal will also dance. The prices will be put at the lowest limit, 10 and 25 cents, and the result will doubtless be a crowded house.

Saxophones Have Arrived

The five beautiful new saxophones, the first set of the kind in Canada, which were recently ordered by the 57th Regt. Band have arrived and are on exhibition in the window of Mr. Wm. Loucks for steps on George St. The new instruments have just arrived from Paris and have cost the band about $500.00. The new instruments will prove a great addition to our high-class band.

Don't Allow Operation for Cancer

There is a simpler, safer and more effective Method of Treatment.

Dr. J. C. Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U.S.A., in a paper he read before the Ohio State Medical Society, May 1896, said: "I have operated in a considerable number of cases of Cancer recently, and with one exception all have died within fourteen months after the operation."

This statement of a prominent Surgeon, should make any one suffering from cancer, hesitate before submitting to operation and consider carefully the evidence offered on behalf of the new Constitutional remedy, which cures Cancers, Tumors and all malignant growths, without the necessity of operation. It is a simple vegetable medicine that searches out and destroys the cancer growths, completely eradicates the disease, and at the same time, builds up and invigorates the system.

Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., will be pleased to send full particulars of this treatment, in a plain, sealed wrapper.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE.—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published. Ed. Times.]

—The schools will re-open to-day.

—Read The Times and be up-to-date.

—The market on Saturday was very well attended.

—A few loads of wood on the market on Saturday sold for from $4.50 to $5.

—Subscribers to The Times are requested to call and settle their accounts to the end of last year.

—There was no police court on Saturday. New Year resolutions are apparently being kept.

—A small blaze in the upper part of the Bank of Toronto building gave the fire brigade a run on Saturday. The damage did not amount to much.

—The regular monthly meeting of the W.C.T.U., will be held in the Y.M.C.A. on Wednesday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock. An urgent invitation is extended to all interested to be present.

Services Appreciated

On Thursday last, Mr. James Bradley, the efficient sexton of the George street Methodist church, was presented with a very handsome bible, by the Rev. J. P. Wilson, at the Parsonage, as a token of appreciation. Mr. Bradley accepted the gift in a few words of thanks.

A Lindsay View

Peterboro citizens will not have to turn out to-day, the Council having been elected acclamation owing to the retirement of eight candidates. Advantage was taken of the increase in population, and the Council now comprises Mayor Dehne and eleven aldermen. In re-electing all the old members with but one exception Peterboro citizens have shown their good sense — they will have the services of trained men, and will be spared the costly blunders (often traceable to the foolish experiments of men who could not fill the position of poundkeeper with credit to themselves and advantage to the community.

Lecture on Palmistry

Don't fail to attend the lecture on Scientific Palmistry by Prof. O'Brien on Wednesday evening, January 8th, in Sons of England Hall. Admission, 25c. A limited number of reserved seat tickets at 35c may be secured at Prof. O'Brien's private office, 263 Hunter street. Chair to be taken by Dr. McClelland at 8 o'clock. Madame Bonvini O'Brien, the Misses Hurley, Mr. Geo. Dawson and other prominent vocalists, will take part in the musical programme.

A Peterboro Man in Texas

The Corpus Christi Caller says:—Mr. Christopher Leary, of Peterboro' Ont. Can., arrived in Corpus Christi this week on a visit to his son, Thos. Leary, the artesian well hustler, whom he has not seen in twelve years. The father, who is 81 years old and is still spry for his age, is a great horseman, and admirer of good horses. The Caller extends to Mr. Leary a hearty welcome to Nueces county, one of the best live stock counties in Texas.

Mr. C. Leary is well known in town, and is the father of Mr. R. Leary one of Peterborough's most up-to-date livery men. The friends of Mr. Leary, sr., will be pleased to know that he arrived at his destination safely.

Where to Vote Today

The voting on the question of purchase of the Waterworks system, takes place to-day. The ratepayers of the town should interest themselves in this matter and every one who is entitled to vote should attend the polls and express his opinion for or against the by-law by his vote. The following are the polling places in the various sub-divisions in the town.

Polling Division No. 1.—M. H. Halpin's store; A. Williams, Deputy Returning Officer.

Polling Division No. 7—Wm. Lee's shop; G. W. Powell, Deputy Returning Officer.

—Miss Pearl Hardill, of town, has returned home after spending a few days with friends in Keene.

—Rev. E. A. Langfeldt has returned from Orillia, where he spent New Years Day.

—Mr. Fred LaFevre has returned from a trip to England and leaves in a few days for Cuba.

—Mr Hugh Stevenson, of Toronto, organizer of the International Typographical Union was in town Saturday.

—Rev. Washington Morre, who resides on College street town, has returned from an extended trip through the United States.

—Miss Luella Dutton, who has been the guest of Miss Edna Stanger for the past week, returned to her home in Campbellford, on Saturday.

—Mr. Charlie Tucker left for the West Indies on Saturday, in the interest of the Sherwin-Williams Co., and expects to be away several months.

—Mr. John Craig, the popular proprietor of the Craig House, Lakefield, was in town Saturday and gave The Times a friendly call.

—Miss Geraldine King entertained a number of her young friends on Saturday evening in honor of her guest, Miss Marie Harmer, of Toronto. Miss Harmer leaves for Toronto this afternoon to resume her studies at Havergal Ladies' College.

Laid at Rest

The funeral of the late David Knox took place yesterday afternoon from the family residence, Queen st., at 2 o'clock, and proceeded to the Little Lake Cemetery. A large number of the friends and relatives of the deceased attended the funeral and paid their last respects. The floral designs were numerous and beautiful. Rev. Dr. Torrance, of St. Paul's church, conducted the funeral service.

Canadian Magazine.

Professor Goldwin Smith discusses "The Public School Question" in the January Canadian Magazine, characterizing our present system as mechanical and inflexible. He thinks voluntary schools might be grafted on our present system with some advantage. The Hon. L. G. Power, Speaker of the Senate, discusses our Military System, and advocates the enrolment of all citizens in the volunteer force, with a shorter, unpaid drill season. He bases his suggestions on the experience of Nova Scotia before Confederation. Arthur H. U. Colquhoun discusses the Reciprocity situation, and intimates that Canada has nothing to expect from the United States. Arnold Haultain gives a beautiful word picture of the Sea. Wilford W. Beaton describes a new Canadian Glacier, his article being well illustrated. W. G. Ross gives a history of Street Railways in Canada and Jean Blewett contributes a story. The number is exceedingly valuable.

THE TIMES LETTER-BOX

Vessel Displacement.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—Kindly give me a concise explanation of the meaning of the term "displacement" as used with regard to vessels and what relation it bears to the weight of the vessel. According to the definitions as given in books, a vessel displaces its own weight. If this is so, how can a vessel carry a weight (including its own) greater than its given displacement?

D. S.

Reply.—The displacement of a vessel is the weight of water displaced by the bottom and sides of a vessel below the waterline. A ship does not carry a weight greater than its displacement; the carrying capacity of a ship is measured by marine tons of forty-eight cubic feet, while the displacement is measured by tons of 2,000 pounds. If the displacement is less than the weight, the vessel will sink; if more, the vessel floats. The ability of a ship designer is shown, among other things, in getting a large displacement with small weight, thus leaving room for cargo, &c.—Ed.

JAMES O'BOYLE ARRESTED

At Claremont Charged With Obtaining Money Under False Pretences

Mr. Jas. O'Boyle, who for some time has been engaged in buying hogs and selling to Mr. H. P. Kennedy of town, was arrested on Saturday last at the home of his brother, near Claremont, on a charge of obtaining $1500.00 from Mr. Kennedy under false pretences.

The facts alleged in connection with the case date back to Dec 11th when Mr. Kennedy sent $1500.00 to O'Boyle at Claremont to pay for a car load of hogs he was supposed to have ready for shipment. The money was sent with Mr. M. Kincaid, of Bethany and handed over to O Boyle at Claremont. It is charged that O Boyle had no hogs ready for shipment and that after receiving the money left without making any explanation. It is alleged he secured $1200 from a Toronto firm in a similar manner.

The prisoner comes up for hearing at Whitby to-morrow. The warrant was sworn out by Mr. Kincaid.

A LONDON FOG

Its Dense Thickness is Exceeded Only by Its Solidity.

London, Jan. 6.—Some unofficial experiments carried out at Chelsea during the recent fog, according to Sir William Thiselton-Dyer, the Director of Kew Gardens, showed that in a week six tons of solid matter were deposited on a square mile. They included not only soot, but a variety of tarry hydro-carbons, highly injurious to animal and vegetable life. Adopting the postoffice telephone area of 600 square miles, this means that the metropolis labored under a weight of 3600 tons of this dreadful compound before the wind was strong enough to carry it to another part of the country. The other part of the country might be the Berkshire downs where Sir William Richmond has sometimes seen a solid bank of fog creeping up from the east. There they call it London dirt.

Another instance of the destroying power of the London fog was supplied at the meeting of the Coal Smoke Abatement Society by Professor Church, who exhibited an evil looking object, two inches thick, which had recently been chipped off the moulding of the gallery outside the great dome of St. Paul's. This deposit covers most of the building where water penetrates, and it only contains 1 per cent. of soot, the remainder comprising chemical products which are most pernicious to Portland stone. Professor Church also has a grievance against the fog as the enemy of oil paintings. So great indeed is the injury which soot and smoke do to art as well as nature that it is rather surprising a society has not been formed for the promotion of fog.

The Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

PATENTED 19TH MARCH, 1894.

For hard or soft coal, coke or peat. The only coal stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

THE STAR is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion——why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces

THE STAR has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

THE STAR is 25 per cent. more economical than any other stove.

More than 5,000 are in use in the lower provinces.

PRICE LIST

Detroit, Mich., June 24, 1899.

My Dear Sir:—Yours of the 14th inst to hand, and because of business, you will pardon my delay in making reply. I am pleased to note the wonderful success of the Canada Business College, and as my mind goes back to some 18 years ago, and I was then permitted to be one of your students, I wish to assure you with a grateful heart, that I have never regretted the many pleasant and happy days I spent in your school. I say pleasant, because I always found you courteous and kind to all, and happy, because I first learned from you the true principles of a business career and which I was called upon to adopt.

Wishing you every success, I am Sir,
Yours Truly,

HAMILTON'S COLUMNS AFTER MORE SUPPLIES

Bruce Hamilton's Column Compelled to go to Depots for Supplies and Horses

MAY BUILD A RAILWAY AND SAVE TIME.

The British Horses in Much Better Condition Than the Boers—Strain on Horses Very Great

London, Jan 7.—A correspondent of the Times, wiring from Ermelo, South-East Transvaal, says the absence of news from the Eastern Transvaal is due to the fact that columns under Bruce Hamilton have had to go to various depots to obtain provisions and fresh horses. The respite thus given the Boers is to be regretted, as it enables them to escape from corners at which they might have been captured when the rivers were flooded. The intervals between the operations are inevitable, says the correspondent, unless more men and animals are available to convey supplies and depots are advanced. If it is found worth while to thread the country with blockhouses surely it is feasible and worth while to run light railways along the lines of blockhouses. Such a railway for twenty miles along the Standerton-Ermelo road would save three days' time. The Boers when in any numbers now carefully put at least twenty miles between themselves and the British. The strain on horses is consequently enormous. At present the horses of the British are in better condition than those of the Boers, and recent captures were effected simply by galloping down the enemy. This advantage, it is declared, will be lost unless a regular system of resting horses is introduced.

BOERS HARRASSED BY BRITISH FORCE

Being Roughly Handled in All Directions by Kitchener.

THE SYSTEM OF BLOCK HOUSES

Has Now Been Completed in Large Districts and the Chase After the Wily Enemy Now Begins.

Ottawa, Jan. 7.—Lieut. Morrison, the clever editor of the Citizen, who was a member of the second contingent, prints the following:

The casual reader of war news should not misinterpret the events of the past ten days. Two weeks ago the Citizen pointed out that General Kitchener had hemmed in the hot-bed of Boer resistance with block-houses and had gone out from Pretoria to Belfast to inaugurate a general bucketing of the commandoes in the parallelogram of territory enclosed by the Delagoa Bay railway on the north, the Natal railway from Johannesburg to Laing's Nek on the south, the Swazi and Portuguese border on the east and a line of block-houses from Brugspruit on the Delagoa Bay line to a point on the Natal railway on the west. That territory includes Ermelo, Carolina, Bethel and Standerton, where the best fighting men among the Transvaalers hail from. We said that important events might be anticipated, and they have, though the results to date have not been of a decisively successful character. The fighting, however, has been almost continuous. Some wise armchair correspondents in London attribute this to renewed activity of the Boers. That is quite correct in a sense, but the renewed activity consists in the commandoes being chivied around that parallelogram by Kitchener's columns like rodents in a rat pit, and quite naturally they are putting up a nasty fight. Our old friend, De Wet, has been poked up out of his seclusions and first made a rush towards Heilbron where he encountered Wilson's column and was beaten off; then he moved in the direction of Lindley and was met by three converging columns and roughly handled by General Dartnell; De Wet turned northward and the same night jumped into those Yeomanry and cleaned up the outfit, but the Imperial Light Horse were hot on his trail and arrived in time to give him a hot chase. In the same manner a number of commandoes have been harried with varying success, and unless they succeed in breaking through the blockhouse cordon they won't be able to maintain their strenuous activity very long. If Kitchener can continue forcing them to fight as he has been doing during the past ten days, even though the Boers score isolated successes, Kitchener can afford to lose men and they cannot, and the process of attrition will be rapid. It is a big section of country about 10,000 square miles, but if the British columns continue to stimulate the Boer "activity" as they have been doing they will soon tire them out.

In the meantime Kitchener is forming block-house corrals east of Kroonstadt and at other points of the guerrillas stamping grounds and the same tactics will be pursued there until those districts are cleared up and the enemy either captured or killed off. There will be a considerable demand for mounted troops and the wear and tear on the mobile columns will no doubt be considerable, but the prospects of decisive results is good.

BRITISH POLICY IS AGGRESSIVE

Friends of Chamberlain Say He Will Not Reopen Negotiations

SCOTS' GREYS WERE AMBUSHED

A Detachment of the Famous Regiment Has an Engagement About Miles East of Pretoria

London, Jan. 6.—The personal friends of Joseph Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, say that he will set his face against the revival of peace negotiations. They say that he is determined to continue the campaign till every Boer now under arms is a prisoner. He considers that the Boers have already been offered everything within reason, and that any reopening of negotiations with Mr. Kruger is utterly impracticable, and will only expose the British cause to ridicule. It is not likely that the Government will be influenced in any degree by Lord Rosebery's plain speaking.

SCOTS GREYS AMBUSHED AGAIN.

Pretoria, Jan. 6.—A party of Scots Greys were ambushed by the Boers near Bronkhorst Spruit, forty miles from Pretoria, on Saturday last. The British casualties were six men killed and thirteen wounded. This regiment has been particularly unfortunate during this war. Two squadrons were ambushed at Nitral's Nek, about fifteen miles west of Pretoria, in June, 1900, and the whole party killed, wounded or captured.

ARTILLERY M. R.

Johannesburg, Jan. 6.—Lord Kitchener has organized and put on the field a corps of Mounted Rifles, 1400 strong, composed of gunners from the batteries stationed in Johannesburg and Pretoria. The reduced forces of the Boers offer little scope for artillerymen, and it is believed that they can be used with greater effect as a mobile column to crush out the final resistance of the burghers.

LAND GRANTS.

Bloemfontein, Jan. 6.—The authorities are purchasing land in various parts of the country, and will split it into small holdings, to enable settlers to establish small communities and villages. The railways are rapidly resuming civil business and private freight traffic.

Montreal, Jan. 6.—Mr. C. A. Harwood of this city, a relation by marriage of Col. Steele, who has been in correspondence with him continuously, says he is in a position to give an unqualified denial to the story which has been printed so widely regarding the colonel's dissatisfaction with the treatment meted out to him in South Africa.

CANADIAN CASUALTIES.

London, Jan. 6.—Advices have been received here of the death of Corp. Hilliard Sloan, as the result of wounds received at Roosthop on Dec. 31. He is the son of Thomas Sloan, of 232 Farley avenue, Toronto.

Constable McNaughton died at Heidelburg on Dec. 26.

FRANCE'S IRE IS AGAIN ROUSED ABYSSINIAN RAILWAY PROJECT

FRENCH PEOPLE NOW WANT BRITISH INFLUENCE WITH ABYSSINIA OFFSET

London, Jan. 6.— The Paris correspondent of The Times says a great deal of interest is being taken in the Abyssinian Railway project, and everyone is convinced that something must be done to expel British influence. The French people have decided that the matter is of paramount political importance and singularly like the Egyptian question.

BOER RECRUITS

The Stream of Men who Pass Through Cape Colony.

London, Jan. 7.—The extension of martial law to the Cape ports is stated to have put a stop to the stream of European volunteers who passed up country to join the Boers in the field.

This leakage of reinforcements to the enemy is believed to have been going on for months, and a correspondent writes that as far back as June last he gave information to the authorities at Cape Town, furnishing full details and even several names of mercenaries who were waiting to proceed to the front. His information was treated with contempt.

Our correspondent expresses a doubt as to the efficacy of martial law in preventing this clandestine recruiting.

DEMAND CASH ON THEIR BODIES

Trouble for Two Jokers Who Smuggled a Bottle of Whiskey Into Canada.

Binghampton, N. Y., Jan. 7.—Leroy Everett of Deposit and a Buffalo friend are in trouble. Everett and his friend attended the Pan-American Exposition and took a trip to Canada. They had a bottle of whiskey, which they smuggled into the Dominion, and, drinking the contents, threw the bottle overboard while returning from a trip to Sylvan Beach. Attached to the bottle was a card addressed to "His Royal Highness, Halbert Hedward," informing him that the bottle had been smuggled into his dominion, and was presented to him as payment instead of duty. The past week Collector of Customs Burndel informed the jokers that the bottle had fallen into the hands of the Canadian authorities, that the card attached bore the address of the jokers, and that the Canadian authorities demanded that they pay 50 cents duties or that their bodies be surrendered. It cost the jokers $5 for fees and taxes.

Loaded Pistol Subdued Crew

Oakland, Cala., Jan. 6.—With their captain dead, two men in prison for rebellious conduct and a crew bordering on mutiny, the subordinate officers of the French bark Connetable De Richemont, discharging coal at Howard's Dock, have applied to the French Consulate, the Commander of the French cruiser Protet, lying in San Francisco harbor, and the Oakland police, for protection.

The mate, who is in temporary charge of the vessel, is maintaining his authority with a loaded pistol. The trouble on board the bark began during her 150 days' voyage from Swansea to San Francisco, 30 days of which were occupied in beating around Cape Horn. The delay enraged the crew one of whom knocked the Chief Mate down. Another flatly refused to obey orders. Captain Thoreaux died last Friday and since that time the mates have been unable to control the men. Two of the mutinous sailors have been arrested, and if the local courts cannot deal with them they will be turned over to the officers of the cruiser Protet.

TWO SHIPS LOST.

London, Jan. 6.—The British steamer Alfonso, which sailed from Newport December 15 for Gibraltar, and the Spanish steamer, Vijelva, both loaded with coal, collided during the night of January 4 off Averio, Portugal. Both vessels sank. Eighteen men of the British steamer and one man belonging to the Spanish ship were drowned. Twenty-four members of the crew of the Vijelva and the captain of the British steamer were picked up and landed at Matto Linhos.

REFUGE AT LAST

The King's Daughters Have Found a Place for Bertha Freeburn

To those of our citizens who are interested in the fate of this poor epileptic orphan, it will be welcome news to know that the King's Daughters have taken her case in hand and have succeeded in securing accommodation for the girl in St. Joseph's House of Providence, Ashburnham, and when the Minister of Justice gives Bertha Freeburn her liberty once more she will be taken to that place where she will receive the treatment so long denied her.

It will be remembered that this unfortunate girl, born in gaol, and without a friend in the world, was accommodated some two years ago at the Children's Shelter on Charlotte street, during the time Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Miller were in charge, and the treatment she received while there, cannot but reflect the greatest credit on Mrs. Miller. During the time the girl spent in gaol, she was kindly treated by the gaoler, Mr. Nesbitt, and the matron, and a few days ago, Mr. Nesbitt, who was deeply interested in the case, announced that the girl would be liberated in a few days, and expressed a wish that she would be taken care of by some charitable institution in town as he does not consider the gaol a proper place for an invalid to be confined in.

The King's Daughters was the first society to take interest in the case, and they are to be commended on their undertaking. They are also making provision for the temporary shelter of women who, falling into the hands of the police, are deemed by them, victims of unmerited misfortune and as such are deserving of better housing than the criminal's cell.

This step taken will mark a distinct advance in the treatment of poor and destitute in the town. We shall have then, in addition to the Children's Shelter, a Temporary Women's Shelter, for destitute women, and, thus equipped, our consciences will at last be relieved of a most uncomfortable burden.

Before all things, Christ thought of the poor, and if we are to be of Him we must think of the comfort of others in poor circumstances. We believe the true test of a Christian, as of a man or a woman, is the impulse of self-sacrifice. The person who can "eat and be merry" while some poor creature is wandering in the cold, may in some future day find circumstances reversed, for we may rest assured that whoever else may be, "God is not mocked." An old philosopher says: "If we would reap virtue, we must sow charity."

When we think of how we enjoy ourselves in the open air, and free to revel in the loveliness of summer we are better able to sympathize with Bertha Freeburn, who in addition to her misfortunes, has been long confined in a dull, cheerless cell. We are inclined to think that it is less urgent to care for the well-to-do than those to whom comfort is a stranger. Being less trouble, it is of course, easier to look after the former than the latter, but the fact is borne in upon us that in some way this is a serious failing. However, the King's Daughters are setting us a noble example and it will, no doubt, bear good fruit in the end.

THE TIMES LETTER-BOX

ABOUT VACCINATION

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—As there is likely to be a brisk trade done during the next few days in vaccine points, it would seem selfish to allow the druggists (whose legitimate business it rightly is), to reap the whole benefit. Therefore, be it resolved that the dry goods merchants be requested to fill up the tables (which, during the holiday season, contained fancy goods, crockery, china, books, vases, etc.) with this commodity. It would facilitate matters, and if some of the above stores would employ an expert the deed might be done "while you wait", thereby helping (?) the doctors during their busy season.

Yours etc.,

ANTI-QUACK.

THE TWO RACES

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I see by the papers that a deputation of English-speaking lawyers interviewed the Premier in regard to the composition of the Court of King's Bench in the French Province. The speeches made were moderate, but all to the point. It is, of course lamentable that there should be necessity for such action as we naturally look to the judiciary of the country was representative of what was best in legal talent, in character, in probity, wholly irrespective of nationality, but when there is a disposition to over-ride the interests of an important element of the population, it becomes an imperative duty to stand up for equitable dealing as between the two races. The Government insists that the majority is far too tolerant, too gracious and too compliant to the minority in Quebec.

Are we then mistaken? Have we merely dreamt that in the city of Quebec Protestant worshippers have been stoned in their churches; that defenceless Salvation Army girls have been assailed on the streets; that the deliberate policy has been to repress the minority; that in the city of Montreal all public institutions are manned by French-Canadians to the exclusion of the English; that the French outlying municipalities have been annexed to the city with the deliberate design of rendering the English vote nugatory—the minority refusing to sub-divide the great English wards which pay three-fourths of the taxes, refusing to give employment to English-speaking citizens, with the result that the flower of the young men of English parentage have gone out from us either to the newer provinces or the Northwest; refusing to allow the English in the west end an English name for the square in front of the Grand Trunk offices; refusing an English name to an east end park; refusing the slightest concession which would abate one jot of the utmost claim to power and rule. One might adduce innumerable instances throughout the province to prove that the constant practice has been to depress the minority upon all possible occasions.

I do not say that this has always been done brutally. On the contrary, the exclusion, the refusal of participation in public life, the depression of English interests, is very often accompanied by a polite bow, a smile, and the accents of friendship. Pleasant things will be said, too. The English-speaking Canadians are regarded as an important element in the community. They have enterprise. They are energetic. They are needed to give the complement to French graces and imagination. And so on and so forth. And while we may be caught by this prettiness, the policy is being carried out. Slowly, silently, deliberately, the English-speaking minority in this province are being made to feel that their nationality is a disability. It is a necessary consequence that the English-speaking population should show a decline. The material interests of this element, however, grow in value and importance, and it is well that at last—at long last, firm voices should be raised in the demand of justice. It will be well that this demand should be listened to,— well for the peace of the country, well for the stability of our institutions, which are framed upon the presumption of inflexible justice.

Thanking you Mr. Editor, I am, &c.

A LOYAL CANADIAN.

Montreal, Jan 2.

Ans—There are those who still expect a fusion of the French-Canadians with the large body of English-Canadians, thus making one powerful whole as, though the common schools in the United States, one sentiment and one tongue have been guaranteed, but those who insist that there should be no French-Canadians should remember the strength of traditions and usage and racial aspriations, which are not quenched under any forms of constitutional government. A dual language under one flag makes for weakness; that is admitted. Yet it is idle to expect that our French-Canadians will part with their separate life. They have the folk lore of Old French. They have the French habits, the French ideals—all transplanted. When Germany conquered France, she insisted upon the German tongue supplanting the French language in the new provinces. It was brutal, but it made for homogeneity. The United States invited the world to her shores, but she insisted upon the common school in which there should be only one language taught and that English. Captain Mahan in a recent article, points out that England will be guilty of a fatal weakness, if she allows the Dutch to have official status under the new rule, when the war is over. We have long recognized certain conditions in this country which made for weakness. We need not enlarge upon them. The country has to face the problem of two separate nationalities which will never apparently coalesce. Our French friends appeal to history. They quote treaties. They quote poetry. They enlarge upon the original bond. They write into the treaty matters to which the treaty gave no countenance. And they have wrested from simple meanings conditions which it was never contemplated should be guaranteed. We must not get angry. On the contrary, we must find out the point of view. We must understand in some measure the force of racial aspiration. But separation should not be accentuated.

Body Cremated

New York, Jan 6.— Miss Hannah R. Phillips, the educator and physician, having requested it upon her deathbed, her body has been cremated and next Saturday, after a simple service on the decks of one of the Staten Island ferry boats, the ashes will be scattered upon the waters of New York Bay. Miss Phillips was 84 years of age, was born in the west. For many years she was a teacher in the New York public schools. Afterwards she studied medicine, and achieved prominence as a specialist.

BARONET ATTEMPT SUICIDE

Sir Edward Watson, Cousin of Yacht Designer Takes Poison.

New York, Jan. 7.—A man who attempted to commit suicide on a Brighton Beach train today was identified as Sir Edward Watson, a son of an Irish clergyman and a cousin of Designer Watson, of the Shamrock. He is in the Seney Hospital, Brooklyn, suffering from a draught of acetic acid.

"This is poison. I have taken some of it!" exclaimed Sir Edward to the conductor of a Brighton Beach train, holding a three-ounce bottle labelled acetic acid, in his hand, as he walked toward the door of the car at the next station, where he was removed from the train.

Sir Edward is a civil engineer. In a packet was a letter of recommendation from the St. Bartholomew Employment Bureau, at No. 211 East Forty-second street, signed by Thomas W. Hotchkiss, superintendent.

His father was a clergyman of good standing in the Church of England.

Mrs. Miles Bronson, of White Plains, said that Watson was Sir Edward Watson, a distant relative of her husband.

Union Prayer Meeting

The first of the series of union prayer-meetings which are to be held during the week, was held in St. Andrew's Church last evening. The meeting was largely attended; on the platform were Revs. Potter, Yuill, Barlow and Hanna. Rev. Mr. Potter presided and expressed the wish that there might be less formality and more hearty co-operation during the prayer season. The scriptural lesson was read by Rev. Mr. Yuill, and Rev. Mr. Hanna delivered a thorough address on the topic for the evening, "The Vision of God in Christ," pointing out the liability of "looking at Christ without seeing Christ," and the great distinction between "knowing about Christ," and "knowing Christ."

God had performed all that He could do, and the reconciliation of man with God, was one instance where God proposes and man disposes.

The meeting this evening will be held in Charlotte Street Methodist Church, when the topic, "Our Nation," will be taken by Rev. Dr. Torrance.

COULD GERMANY CONQUER U. S.

Lieut. Von Edelstein Formulates a Plan to Accomplish Task

GOULD TAKE COAST TOWNS

But he Does Not Think That the Cities of the Interior Could be Endangered at All

London, Jan. 6. — The London Daily Express published a map showing "a German plan to conquer America," together with a comparison of the German and American navies and the available troops of the two nations. It says:

Could Germany conquer the United States? Lieutenant von Edelsheim, 2d Regiment of Uhlans of the German Imperial Guard, thinks she could if she followed the plan which he has formulated.

For the very reason of the great extent of the United States, an invasion of the interior is not to be considered seriously. But there would be chances of success in striking blows upon the seacoast and cutting the great arteries of exportation and importation so as to paralyze the industrial and commercial life of the United States, which would oblige that power to accept peace.

If the mobilization of the transport squadron and the corps of invasion began at the moment of departure of Germany's fighting fleet for American waters, it will be admitted that the invading troops might come into action on American soil at the end of about four weeks.

The United States is not in a condition to bring into opposition, within an equal time, an army equal in numbers to Germany's corps of invasion.

Actually the regular army of the United States is on a footing of 65,000 men, but of this number there are not more than 30,000 available for the defence of the mother country. Besides that, there must be deducted from that number at least 10,000 men, who cannot be spared from surveillance of the Indian territories and from the maritime defences.

ONLY 20,000 REGULARS.

There remains, then, only 20,000 regular troops for the actual campaign. True, there are besides about a hundred thousand militia, but in the late war the greater part did not answer the call. Moreover, these militia are armed, in great part, with muzzle loading muskets, and are badly drilled besides.

Because of the length of the voyage the transportation of the German troops could not be done by surprise, but still the landing could be accomplished suddenly at an unexpected point of the coast.

When we consider, Lieutenant Edelsheim points out, that the Americans have no plan of mobilization well worked out in time of peace, and take into account also the inexperience and weakness of the regular army of the United States, we may confidently hope that a corps of invasion, operating with suddenness, would have a chance of success.

Germans could dream, of course, of permanent occupation, which would require an army of too high effectiveness; but it would be feasible to occupy the principal maritime cities.

It is as well to remark here that in the lieutenant's opinion Germany is the only great power in a position single handed to attack the United States. Britain, in case of war with America, could only gain success on the sea. She would be powerless to defend Canada, where the Americans could make good their maritime reverses.

Failing, save Britain, no other great power but Germany, has, of her own, sufficient transport vessels to undertake such an operation as has just been described.

PETERBOROUGH WILL PURCHASE WATERWORKS

This Was the Decision of the Ratepayers at the Polls Yesterday

THE MAJORITY FOR THE BY-LAW WAS 381

A Large Majority for the Purchase of the System in Every Ward—Vote Polled not very Large

Yesterday the freeholders of the town voted on and decided in favor of a by-law authorizing the expenditure of the largest sum of money ever voted in this town. The vote was for the purchase of the waterworks system of the town which purchase means the paying by the town to the Peterborough Waterworks Co., of the sum of $230,000 for which amount, debentures will be issued payable in a term of years. For a long time the question of Municipal ownership has been a subject consideration for many of our leading citizens and has at different times occupied the attention of the Town Council, but it was decided that no steps be taken until such times as the Company were willing to sell without having the case go to arbitration. A few months ago an engineer examined the plant and machinery of the company and an inspection made of the system with the result that the town made an offer to the company, providing the ratepayers sanctioned it, for the purchase of the entire system for the sum of $230,000 which the company accepted. This way has meant the saving of many thousands of dollars for had the case gone to arbitration it would have cost a great deal more.

The people did not appear to take much interest in the matter but yesterday they turned out and voted in a more spirited manner than they have ever done before in a question of the same kind.

The result of the voting is given below by polling sub-divisions.

	For	Against	Majority
No. 1. Sub. Div.	83	11	72
No. 2. Sub. Div	66	10	56
No. 3. Sub. Div.	44	4	40
No. 4. Sub. Div	49	9	40
No. 5. Sub. Div.	67	18	49
No. 6. Sub. Div.	57	5	52
No. 7. Sub. Div.	84	12	72

The largest votes polled being in No. 1 and No. 7 Sub. division, each giving a majority of 72.

The transfer of the waterworks plant &c. will be made to the town in a short time when it will be necessary to appoint commissioners to look after the business. That the town has made a long stride in the present instance in the right direction, will remain to be proven, but with good business men as commissioners we should soon receive the advantages as in other town and cities where the municipality controls the water. This purchase will mean a large saving every year to the town and will in a few years pay for itself.

BRITISH FORCE KILLED 11 BOERS

Successful Encounter of Beresford's Force of constabulary

CAPTURED THIRTY-FIVE MEN

Killed and Captured Include Three Field Cornets—Engagement in Orange River Colony.

Bloemfontein, Orange River Colony, Jan. 6.—Beresford's force of Constabulary encountered a force of Boers January 4, in the central part of the Orange River Colony, killed Field Cornet Pretorius and ten men and captured 35 burghers, including Field Cornets Leroux and Erasmus.

Boer atrocities towards the natives which are now being reported by British commanders are bad but early in the war an even worse condition of affairs prevailed. For some reason the British press made scant reference to these peculiarities of Brother Boer at that time. When D battery, R. C. A., was at Pretoria in July, 1900, the officers saw a large band of natives herded together near the station under guard. They had been sent into the British lines by the Boers after being mutilated for giving information or suppling to the invaders. The breasts of the mothers were gashed with knives and the men were more hideously treated. A more revolting and distressing sight could not be imagined. The poor creatures appeared to be without care whether they lived or died; but their condition did not appear to attract any particular attention.

Prohibition

A News reporter called on Mr. F. S. Spence, secretary of the Dominion Alliance, in his offices in the Confederation Life Building, this morning to ascertain his opinion of the reception which the prohibition deputation received at the hands of Premier Ross yesterday. To this end the following questions were asked of Mr. Spence:

"Do you consider that the prohibitionists should have reason for discouragement because of the answer Mr. Ross made to the requests of the deputation?"

"No, I do not, Mr. Ross is a politician, and could not be expected to declare his policy a week before the opening of the House. I did not expect any other. If he had defined his position he would have played into the hands of his political opponents."

"Will that answer weaken his position politically, in so far as the prohibition party is concerned?"

"Again, no. Our movement is based on three facts: The Government pledged itself to prohibition if the people wanted it; the people voted for it, and the Privy Council has decided that the Provincial Government has power to legislate. Mr. Ross yesterday did not deny any one of these three points. Further, he did not give me the impression that he was considering whether or not to keep his promise."

"Then you expect that a prohibitory liquor law will be enacted at the next session?"

"Certainly. That is, I expect Mr. Ross to keep his promise just the same as if I held your note for a certain sum of money, and you promised to redeem it."

"When do you expect such a law to be enforced?"

"Immediately after it has passed the House. Mr. Ross yesterday expressed his determination of bringing the request of the deputation for the immediate enforcement of a prohibitory liquor law, before his colleagues."

"If enacted, is it possible, do you believe, to enforce such a law?"

"If you mean a law that will absolutely abolish the liquor traffic, I say no; but if you have in mind a measure that will greatly decrease the present consumption of intoxicants, then I say yes. I do not expect, such a law to be as successful as the law which is enforced to stop theft or murder for instance, at first, but it will acquire increasingly greater force by [illegible]."

ENGLAND AND RUSSIA ON PERSIAN GULF

A SHARP ANTAGONISM EXISTS

The Two Countries May Come to Blows Over Events There

A Trouble That England Must Deal With—Russia's Warlike Position

London, Jan. 7.—A sharp antagonism between English and Russian interests in the Persian Gulf is foreshadowed in recent despatches from Bombay. The Sheikh of Koweyt, a town situated on the northwest corner of the gulf, and the proposed terminus of the Bagdad railroad, has refused to allow the landing of a special mission sent by the Sultan of Turkey, and in effect declines to acknowledge the sultan as his suzerain. Behind this refusal is the support of England, whose virtual control of Koweyt has been maintained for some time and was recently emphasized by a refusal to allow Turkish troops to land. For reasons which have not been officially stated, but which will be suggested by a glance at the map, England deems the possession of Koweyt necessary to her present naval predominance in the gulf. While this predominance is being emphasized a Russian cruiser has appeared in those waters, and its officers are making themselves unusually friendly to the Sultan of Muscat, a more southerly town on the Arabian coast, and well adapted both to command the entrance to the gulf and to be a Russian naval base. In other words Russia, with France as an ally, is obviously preparing to gain a port in the gulf and to establish a naval force there. The question which calls for British decision, and which the London Spectator thinks must be decided very soon, is whether Russia can be permitted to do this without endangering India. As Great Britain might find it very difficult to gain German support there, and as the Russian desire for a port and commercial outlet in the gulf is traditional and legitimate, it would not contradict the later and more liberal British attitude toward Russia to allow the latter to have a gulf port, in view of the overwhelming superiority at sea.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

It Begins To-day—The Programme for the Week is Given Below

The Evangelical Alliance has published the following programme of topics for the week of prayer, and local arrangements as appended.

Wednesday, Jan. 8th — St. Paul's Presbyterian church — Subject, "Our Churches." John 13, 34, 35; John 15, 1, 2, 7; Luke 12, 10; John 17, 18. Speaker, Rev. D. O. Crossley.

Thursday, Jan. 9th — George street Methodist church — Subject, "Christian Missions." Isa 60, 1-5; Luke 24, 46 47. Speaker, Rev. J. Hastow.

Friday, Jan. 10th — Murray street Baptist church — Subject, "The Family and the School." Ps. 68, 6; Gen. 18, 7; Ps. 111, 10. Speaker, Rev. J. P. Wilson.

At each meeting the pastor of the church in which the meeting is held will preside, and arrange praise service. The choirs are very cordially invited to assist in making these meetings bright and helpful. The Ministerial Association will feel much gratified if the choir masters can give this their personal interest.

WEATHER NOTES

Probs: Cloudy to partly cloudy; light local snow or sleet, Tuesday—Still milder.

Unusually fine weather continues to prevail in the northwest portion of the continent, with no immediate indication of a change, and the general outlook in Ontario and Quebec is for mild conditions, more especially after today.

GREAT PROJECTS.

Mr. W. J. Arkell, of New York, is on a tour of observation through Canada. He is interested in locomotive building, and promises that this country will soon have the largest works in the world, because it is the best place in the world for them. Canada has, or will have, the cheapest steel in the world; labor costs less than it does in the States, and the facilities for cheap shipping are the best on the continent. The locomotives will be sold in Canada and in Europe, or wherever there is a demand for engines. They can be made more economically here than anywhere else, and therefore they can be sold anywhere in the world. The demand for locomotives is growing steadily. New railways are being built in Europe, in Asia, in South Africa and in South America, and old engines are wearing out. The demand was never so heavy as at the present time. Such are the reported sayings of Mr. Arkell.

We would like much to believe that these works would be built at the "Soo," where great steel works are promised by Mr. F. H. Clergue and a great ship building plant is talked of by an English syndicate. But the steel works are not under way as yet, while some 300,000 tons of ore from the mines controlled by the syndicate were carried to American lake ports the past season of navigation.

Doubtless Mr. Arkell has Sydney, C. B. in view, when he speaks of the cheapness of production, for there all the raw materials are close together at a point nearer to Europe by nearly a thousand miles than any other iron producing part of America.

Municipal Ownership

I believe in public ownership of great public franchises; and, having staked my political future on that principle, I believe that an endorsement of it by an intelligent community like Toronto will do more to make public men and political parties respect it than anything else.

Municipal ownership of public franchises is attracting much attention, not only in Great Britain, where the system is being actively put in practice, but throughout Canada and a pronouncement by the people in a city like Toronto will be a matter of general interest. In Ottawa the ratepayers will decide upon the question of municipal ownership of a telephone system, and there is no reason to doubt that the pronouncement will be overwhelmingly in the affirmative.

As an indication of the general attention which is being directed to the question of municipal ownership the Stratford Herald prints the facts brought out in a debate on the subject which was held recently in Woodstock indicating the success which has attended the establishment of electric lighting plants in a number of places in the western states. The following prices are for arc lights in municipalities that have their own plants: Galesburg, Ill., $48; Galena, Ill., $40; Austin, Minn., $60; Fremont, Neb., $56; Indianola, $40; Mount Pleasant, $54. These places get light from private companies at the following prices: Waterloo, $65; Jefferson City, $85; Cherokee, $72. Pipestone, Minn., pays $114 for a moonlight schedule, and the mayor of the town says: "Never let the franchise for lighting your city. Better bond the city and let the city own the plant. This is in my opinion the only satisfactory way."

THE USE OF STRONG SOAP WILL NOT WASH OUT DIAMOND DYE COLORS.

Diamond Dye colors are absolutely fast and unfading. Washing with strong soap or exposure in sunlight cannot start or fade these imperishable colors. No other dyes in the world have such a reputation for strength, brilliancy, purity and beauty of colors. Diamond Dyes are the most economical dyes; one package will color as much material as three packages of any other dye.

If you have not yet seen the new and attractive Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns, send your address to The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain St., Montreal, P.Q., and you will be immediately supplied.

The Subject of Pruning Trees

IN a comparatively short time men with saws, hatchets and ladders will appear on the streets importuning householders for permission to 'prune' their shade and street trees. These butchers, who scarcely know one tree from another, should be given no encouragement. To permit them to operate will simply result, in nine cases out of ten, in mutilation and premature death of the trees, because they generally are not acquainted with even the first principles of scientific pruning. The chief idea of most of these men is to so ply the hatchet and saw that a tree will be transformed into an unsightly stump, and then trust to its sending forth later numerous spindly, sickly branches. The wounds made by the tools used are usually more or less jagged, so that a short time after rot sets in, and the owner wonders why the tree dies, or at best does not thrive as it did before. As a matter of fact, very few deciduous trees suitable for street planting require severe pruning, not even the rapidly growing silver maple. There are times, naturally, when the use of the pruning knife is desirable, but when these rare occasions do arise the work should be entrusted to a man who understands his business, and not to one who could not distinguish a chestnut tree from a chestnut oak, if called upon to do so. A man would not go to a blacksmith to repair his watch, and on the same line of reasoning he should not employ the first man who asks to prune his trees. The Pennsylvania State Forestry Association has taken up the matter, and is properly very outspoken in its denunciation of the practice of butchering trees under the name of pruning. If it makes any headway against the barbarous habit, that is particularly prevalent in this Province a good work will be done. The management of trees requires as much knowledge and attention as the practice of medicine, and no householder who is not familiar with the craft should decide on the treatment to be given them. If the question of the propriety of pruning a tree arises, the best course to follow, in the absence of an expert, is to decide negatively.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

It Begins To-day—The Programme for the Week is Given Below

The Evangelical Alliance has published the following programme of topics for the week of prayer, and local arrangements are appended.

Wednesday, Jan. 8th — St. Paul's Presbyterian church, — Subject, "Our Churches." John 13, 34, 35; John 15, 1, 2, 7; Luke 19, 10; John 17, 18. Speaker, Rev. D. O. Crossley.

Friday, Jan. 10th — Murray street Baptist church — Subject, "The Family and the School." Ps. 68, 6; Gen. 18, 19; Ps. 111, 10. Speaker, Rev. J. P. Wilson.

At each meeting the pastor of the church in which the meeting is held will preside, and arrange praise service. The choirs are very cordially invited to assist in making these meetings bright and helpful. The Ministerial Association will feel much gratified if the choir masters can give this their personal interest.

OUR CONSTANT AIM IS TO SERVE OUR PATRONS THOROUGHLY AND WELL.

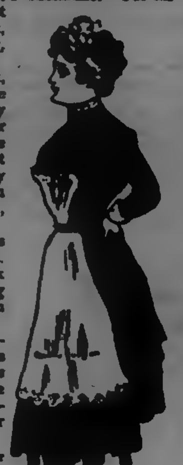
Municipal Insurance

BOBCAYGEON Independent,—Well, This great journal once again stands forward as the advocate of socialism. And this is the reason:—The two most notable places in Canada, Ottawa and Bobcaygeon have both within the last few days been devastated with fire. One fourth of the frontage of the main street of the village is now a blackened mass of ruins, with half burned beams and timber projecting from the mass. The fire in Ottawa covered a greater surface, more people were rendered homeless, and a larger amount of property was destroyed, but the intensity of the evil was experienced equally in both places by those who suffered. The proportionate amount of insurance in both places was small, and we come to the socialism alluded to by this journal. The leaving of insurance to individual action where no other means than insurance in companies is possible, produce very poor results. The companies have to employ canvassers, and agents, and a heavy staff of officers, and the shareholders are satisfied only with a big dividend on the money they have expended. The consequence is that fire insurance is unnecessarily expensive and but little used. In the Ottawa fire not more than one-tenth of the property destroyed was insured. A very slight study of these facts leads to but one conclusion, viz, that insurance against fire should be a part of the duty of the municipality. It would be very easy, very safe, and very cheap. Should a ratepayer's residence be destroyed by fire the municipality would have the loss enquired into and the value of the property destroyed ascertained, and would pay the owner of the property two thirds of its value,—the payment to be made out of the municipal treasury. This would be all that is required in separate small fires, but in such a case as that of Ottawa the payment should be partly made out of the provincial treasury. By this plan every house would be insured; every person present at a fire would exert themselves to the utmost for they would be the insurers; and every ratepayer would be a detective in regard to arson or incendiarism. The moral effect would be excellent; the cost of insuring would be reduced to the lowest possible point; and every bit of property in the province would be insured. What possible objection can be raised to the principle of municipal fire insurance? The principle of mutual insurance which this journal advocates.



The Weak Spot.

If you are sitting in a restaurant where waitresses are in attendance, you will note now and again some young woman put her hand to her back, and straighten herself up, while her lips are tightened as if by pain. It's backache. Yet all day long she must be on her feet, lifting, carrying, hurrying.

That weak spot, the back, can be made strong by the use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It cures the womanly diseases which cause headache, backache, sideache, nervousness and sleeplessness. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

"Favorite Prescription" contains no alcohol, and is absolutely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics.

"I wrote you for advice February 4th, 1896," writes Mrs. Lena Halstead, of Claremore, Cherokee Nat., Ind. Ty. "I was racking with pain from the back of my head down to my heels. Had hemorrhage for weeks at a time, and was unable to sit up for ten minutes at a time. You answered my letter, advised me to use your valuable medicines, viz., Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and 'Pleasant Pellets,' also gave advice about injections, baths and diet. To my surprise, in four months from the time I began your treatment I was a well woman, and have not had the backache since, and now I put in sixteen hours a day at hard work."

Lighter Bread Loaves

THE Woodstock Times,— An erroneous idea prevails among the bakers of this city that no loaf of bread shall be sold which is less than two pounds in weight. At its last session the Ontario government amended the Municipal Act, and section 583 is amended by inserting therein immediately after the words "for regulating the size of bread," the words "provided, however, no such by-law shall apply to bread, or the sale thereof in loaves to which are attached labels showing the weight to be not more than the actual weight of the same."

Loaves weighing less than two pounds, and not being labelled with their proper weight, are being sent into the city from outside places and sold in the stores. The dealers here, Mayor Mearns said this morning, are liable to have their bread seized by the police and themselves fined, as the makers are not complying with the law.

The city bakers have been afraid to make loaves lighter than two pounds heretofore, as the city by-law says bread shall be two pounds in weight, but the new amendment to the Municipal Act overrides the local by-law, and the bakers can make bread as light as they wish, provided they label each loaf with its proper weight.

CHAINED FOR TEN YEARS
HAY FEVER
ASTHMA
EVERY BRINGS RELIEF.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-size bottle."

DRS. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO.:
Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,
REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.
Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows at 130th street, New York. I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the 1st of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully,
O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.
Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle and I am ever grateful. I have a family of four children and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

About sixteen or eighteen miles from Ledstone was situated the charming cathedral city of Northminster. No greater contrast could be possibly imagined than that which existed between the pretty Gothic-built Northminster, and smoky, noisy, busy Ledstone. The inhabitants were mostly of a clerical and military description, among which were scattered here and there one or two scions of aristocratic families whose poverty were only equalled by their pride, and whose raison d'etre appeared to be to rule over Northminster society in a haughty and determined fashion, and to this rule it must be confessed Northminster cheerfully and willingly consented.

There were, as we have said, one or two of these families, but perhaps the head of them all, and the veritable social queen in this peaceful town, was Lady Blanche Bellairs, the widow of a naval commander, who had been both a brave and splendidly connected man.

There were many who rebelled in secret against Lady Blanche's tyranny, but as it was kept in secret it did not very much matter, and on the whole the proud, handsome woman was admired, respected and liked by her friends and acquaintances.

She resided in a delightful, queer, three-cornered old house, that was full of curiosities and valuables, brought back by the admiral from his many cruises, and although there was undoubted grandeur, still there was a distinct air of comfort and enjoyment throughout Maple Tree House. Lady Blanche Bellairs was never so happy as when young voices were echoing in the hall and low, rambling rooms. She was childless; no one had ever heard regret on this subject pass her lips, but upstairs in the corner of her jewel case lay a folded paper with a lock of soft, golden hair, cut from the head of the baby that lived only to rend the mother's heart with grief over its untimely death, ere it passed away. The world knew nothing of this golden curl, but it did remark that, stern and proud as Lady Blanche was, she always had a kind word for a young maiden, and an approving smile for a youth. In fact her house was always full of nieces and nephews, in whose honor Lady Blanche gave the continual tennis parties, picnics, dances, etcetera, for which Maple Tree House was so celebrated; and among all these young people, if Lady Blanche had a favorite, the warmth of her heart was given to Lord Otway, eldest son of her brother, the present Earl of Thanecourt, and heir of course to the title. Such a bright, pleasant young fellow this Ormande Lord Otway was, full of life and vigor in every nerve of his tall, well-built frame; there was no athletic sport or game in which he did not shine—cricket, tennis, golf, he mastered them all; even billiards was not unknown to him, although, as he laughingly said now and then to his aunt:

"If only my bishop knew it, Aunt Blanche, what a row there would be! Wouldn't there?"

For Ormande Lord Otway was in the Church, a profession he had taken up at his own express desire; and if there were many who cheered and admired his prowess in the cricket field, there were others—aye! hundreds of others—who knew his strength, his comfort, the fervent, religious beauty of his mind, that had ministered to them in their sufferings scores of times.

In the July of the year in which this story opens, however, Lord Otway took a short holiday and instead of going to Thane Castle and his family, chose to run down to Northminster and stay with his aunt, Lady Blanche Bellairs, who happened to have as a guest at the same time a young lady whom she was in no wise loth to put in the young man's way.

"It would be a good arrangement," mused Lady Blanche, on a hot July afternoon, as she sat under the trees in the garden, and watched four young people play a game of lawn tennis. "Any one can see she is half way in love with him, and her money would be a splendid thing for Otway!" and Lady Blanche sighed.

The Thanecourt exchequers were very scantily filled and at the rate the present earl was living, they must soon be empty—that is to say, comparatively empty—and if Ormande Lord Otway were to marry money it would be a very good thing, indeed, for the Thanecourt estates.

"She is pretty," the lady mused on. "Yes, Barbara is certainly pretty; and, although Ormande is in the Church, he can appreciate feminine beauty as well as anybody. Well, young people!" This was said out loud, as a slight, girlish figure and Lord Otway's broad, manly one approached her chair.

"I am no use without my own racket, Lady Blanche! I never can play without it," observed Miss Barbara Mostyn, sinking into a garden chair, with a slight frown on her pretty, babyish face.

"Has it not arrived yet? I thought you wrote for it to be sent, my dear." Lady Blanche pursed up her lips. "I must complain to the station master; things are very much delayed nowadays."

"Oh, yes, my dear, it does! Ormande, will you go indoors and ask Marshall to send some one to the station at once to inquire for Miss Mostyn's tennis racket?"

"I'll go myself, Aunt Blanche." Lord Otway sprang to his feet in an instant. "I assure you, Miss Mostyn, I shall enjoy the walk," as Barbara uttered a protest to this. "I want to do a commission for myself! I shall bring back the racket in triumph, and shall expect to be well beaten for my pains."

Barbara Mostyn watched him stride away with mingled feelings of elation and annoyance. It was decidedly pleasant that he should go all that way to gratify her wish, and yet she would have preferred him to stay here in the cool and talk to her. She admired him immensely, this spoiled, petted child of fortune. If she had one regret about him it was that he should be in the Church. To Miss Mostyn it was perfectly incomprehensible that a future earl should willingly give up his whole life to work for others, and she was altogether too shallow to recognise the sweetness and beauty of this man's mind. All she cared about was how she looked in his eyes, and the chance she had of becoming Lady Otway, and the happy prospect of Thanecourt, a position which held decided charms for her.

Little did she think, as she sat under the trees this July afternoon, that as Lord Otway strode away in the hot sun to fetch her tennis racket, he was going to meet one who would destroy the airy castle her ambitious mind had pictured, and live in his heart to his dying day.

CHAPTER IV.

Fast and firm through Northminster's sultry, deserted streets walked the Rev. Lord Otway. He had discarded his long black coat for an ordinary tennis jacket, but in passing through the hall he had picked up his clerical slouched hat, and had thrown it on his curly head, and in this incongruous garb took his way to the station.

The station was very empty when he reached it, and neither the racket nor the station master were to be found; only a hot, tired porter.

"Maybe it 'll come down by the next train from London, my lord. It's due in a quarter of an hour. I'll run up with it to Maple Tree House direct, my lord."

"You will do nothing of the kind. You are tired out as it is, Simmonds," was Lord Otway's cheery remark. "I have absolutely nothing to do. I'll wait for the train and the racket, too."

The porter touched his hat, and gazed after the young man with much appreciation in his face.

"He's one of the right sort, he is," he muttered to himself. Then he ran after Lord Otway.

"I beg your pardon, my lord, but I forgot to say as how you're on the wrong platform, and the next train as comes in here 'll be for London, not from it."

"All right, Simmonds. I'll go round. Thank you."

But just then a bench in a cool corner held forth distinct allurements, and feeling hot and rather tired, the young man sank on to it and fell into a pleasant reverie.

He was aroused by a voice coming from the waiting room just behind him, and the tones struck strangely on his ear. Versed as he was in mental suffering, he knew at once that the speaker was going through some deep mental agony.

"Why have you followed me here? —have I not kept my vow? Why have you broken your promise? I tell you once and for all, if you do not leave me I will fling myself on the rails before the coming train, and end it all!"

The words came out in sharp, short gasps, as though the girl, for it was undoubtedly a girl who uttered them, was beside herself with misery.

The answer was mumbled very low. Lord Otway found himself straining his ears to catch it, but the next moment he pulled himself up. With a blush of shame at his own curiosity he rose from his seat and walked away, but not before he caught the girl's voice again.

"My plans, my future are nothing to you. I have only one desire, to part from you now, and never see your face again. Now go—go!"

Lord Otway walked a few steps down the platform; he could cross the tracks quite easily now if he chose, and yet he did not embrace the opportunity, but stood staring down at the gleaming metals in a strangely vague way till the tinkling of the signal bell, and a little fuss and shouting at the other end of the station told him the train from London was due. With a start he drew back and retraced his steps to the seat again, and just as the train steamed in, a young man came hurriedly out of the waiting-room, brushing him roughly as he went, and strode to the approaching string of cars. Lord Otway watched him in the same vague way as he had stared at the railway tracks, and as the engine whistled and the train steamed slowly by him, his eyes went to that particular compartment into which the young man had entered.

Lord Otway's brows contracted, as his gaze rested on the other's face. He had indeed never seen so handsome yet so evil a countenance before, and there was a curious mixture of feelings in his breast as the carriage passed and the train disappeared, carrying away that face to vanish in the distance. He sat thinking for a moment, when he was aroused again by another person coming out of the room behind him.

If the man's evil face had given him a sense of discomfort and dislike, this girl's exquisite one sent a sudden and distinct feeling of admiration, pity and attraction into his breast.

It was such a pure, pale, sorrowful face. She stood in the doorway and breathed a sigh, a broken sigh, telling, more than words, that she had been enduring the greatest of mental suffering.

"He is gone! Thank Heaven! Thank Heaven!" Lord Otway heard her white lips murmur; then, with another sigh, and brushing her hot, weary eyes, the girl moved past him with slow steps.

Her tall, graceful form was clothed in a soft gray dress; she wore a gray hat, round which was a thick veil, which was flung back, as if to give her air.

To Lord Otway she seemed the embodiment of some beautiful saint; he could not take his eyes from her.

Katharine, for it was she, had no knowledge of his gaze or of his presence; she walked by, lost in her confused, miserable thoughts, seeing, knowing nothing, save that the sacrifice was over—her task was done. She stood a few minutes, with clasped hands, gazing over the pretty view that surrounded Northminster station; then, as a bell rang out suddenly, and the noise of a distant rumble caught her ear, she started, turned and saw that she had not a moment to lose if she would cross the line and catch her train back to Ledstone. With feverish haste she ran to the edge of the platform and down the steps. Her foot was on the line, when, by some mischance, she slipped—staggered and fell.

She was conscious of a sudden sharp pain in her ankle, then of a frank voice shouting encouragement, then of some one stooping over her and raising her in a pair of strong arms, and then—she knew no more.

When she opened her eyes she found herself lying in the waiting-room, on a pile of hard cushions, with a [illegible] of water on her brow and a bottle of strong smelling salts at her nose.

"Come, that's better!" said a gentle yet cheery voice just above her; and lifting her sweet gray eyes, Katharine met the eager, interested, almost tender gaze of a pair of deep blue ones bent anxiously on her face.

She tried to murmur something, or to move, but both efforts were fruitless, and all she could do was to close her eyes again and sigh faintly.

Lord Otway stood by irresolute, with the station-master, Simmonds the porter, and a motherly-looking old lady, who had witnessed the accident from the other platform, and had come hastily to proffer her help and her smelling salts.

"Perhaps, if you were to leave her with me alone, poor dear, she might be better," was her suggestion, as Katharine still lay so quiet and white.

Consequently the stationmaster and porter went outside and Lord Otway followed.

In a few moments the old lady was back.

"It's her foot, poor dear; she seems to be in great pain. I think we should have a doctor. And does any one know where she lives? She ought to be taken home."

Lord Otway was starting to run off rapidly for medical help when the old lady stopped him.

"Can't the porter bring the doctor? I think the child would like to speak to you, sir."

Katharine's eyes rested on him as he came up to her. She stretched out her trembling hand.

"I—I want to thank you," she said faintly. "You saved—my—my life; it was very good of you!"

Lord Otway looked down for an instant at the delicate hand that lay like a lily on his sunburnt palm, then his fingers closed on it.

"I did nothing—absolutely nothing!" he answered hurriedly. "You were in no immediately danger. I only feared you had hurt yourself, and I am grieved to find, through this kind lady, that my fear was too well founded."

"I have twisted my foot, but it will be better directly, and I must get home as soon as I can."

Katharine spoke bravely, but he saw by the twitching of her white lips and the convulsive movement of the hand he still held that she was even now in great pain.

"May I help you still further? Please let me!" he urged eagerly. "Is there anything you want? Can I do anything?"

Katharine drew her hand from his and tried to bring herself into a sitting position.

"I must get back to Ledstone, at once," she murmured, and then her strength failed her and she had to sink down on the cushions and close her eyes.

"I—I am afraid that will be impossible," he replied gently. "You see you cannot move. The doctor will be here directly, and perhaps he may give you his permission, but I doubt it—I do indeed. You are not strong enough to stand, I can see that for myself."

Katharine made no reply; she felt terribly troubled. What would Mrs. Smythe think of her absence? How anxious and frightened she would be!

Lord Otway's voice broke in on her musings. It was odd how curiously his tones seemed to breathe an atmosphere of comfort to her!

"Will you let me send a telegram to your friends? That will set their minds at rest."

Katharine feebly shook her head. She knew how timid Lucy Smythe was; she would always turn pale and shrink from the very sight of a buff-colored envelope, and she had not been well in the morning.

"No," she murmured; "I must go myself."

At this moment Simmonds, the porter, returned with a doctor, and after a few words of explanation, Lord Otway withdrew, leaving the girl alone with the physician and the old lady, whose kind heart was evidently touched warmly.

The young clergyman waited outside. He had forgotten all about Miss Mostyn's tennis racket, and the fact that about this moment the dressing gong was sounding at Maple Tree House did not even creep into his mind. He was thinking, in a vaguely tender way, about the girl whose face had so startled him by its beauty and its mental suffering, wondering what the trouble could be that had come to her so early, what connection that evil-eyed man could have with one so fair, so pure-looking as she, what—

The doctor approaching him made him start.

"It is a very bad sprain, indeed; an awkward case altogether. She lives in Ledstone, she tells me, and was actually imagining she could return there at once. Of course, such a thing is quite out of the question. I asked her if she had any friends in Northminster to whom I could send, and she says there is no one here that she knows at all."

Lord Otway paused.

"Is her foot hurt very much?" he asked slowly.

"She must not dream of putting it to the ground for a fortnight or three weeks. The inflammation is excessive. The best plan will be to telegraph to her home in Ledstone. I am anxious to help her all I can, but she seems very undecided."

Lord Otway held out his hand.

"There is no occasion to detain you, sir," he said, frankly and suddenly. "I am sure you are very busy. I will look after this young lady and if you will give me your name, I will ask her to communicate with you, as doubtless you may wish to see her again."

"My name is Stewart. I live in the Close Yard, and will go to her at once if she sends for me. I have had the pleasure of seeing you here often, Lord Otway."

Anecdotal.

An assistant judge had dropped asleep on the bench. The presiding judge, who was collecting the votes, asked him for his. Rubbing his eyes, the latter said, "Hang him!" "But it is a meadow we are dealing with." "Ah? Well, mow it, then."

A young minister of high-church tendencies was called to preside over a congregation that abhorred ritualism and was a stickler for the simplest of services. He asked Bishop Potter what would be the result if he went in for ritualism just a bit. "Suppose I should burn a pastille or two during the service; what do you think would happen, bishop, for I dearly wish to try the experiment?" "You congregation would be incensed, your vestrymen would fume, and you would go out in smoke," quickly replied the bishop.

An officer in one of the English volunteer regiments, who had made himself exceedingly unpopular with the men, was coming home one evening when he slipped and fell into deep water. He was rescued with great difficulty by a private in his own regiment. The officer was profuse in his expressions of gratitude, and asked his preserver how he could reward him. "The best way," said the soldier, "is to say nothing about it." "But why?" asked the officer, in amazement. "Because," was the blunt reply, "if the other fellows knew I'd pulled you out they'd chuck me in."

The following conversation took place during a recent election in Cumberland, England, between two free and independent electors: "Wot's these 'er Socialists, Jack?" questioned one of the other. "Well," replied the other, "it's this way. If yer had two carriages and two horses, you'd give me one, wouldn't yer?" "Just think I would," replied Bill. "An' if you'd two fields, you'd give me one, wouldn't yer?" "You bet I would," said Bill. "You're a Socialist, Bill—a born Socialist. If you'd two pigs you'd give me one, wouldn't yer?" "Nay, I wouldn't," replied Bill. "Before I'd give yer one I'd fight yer for it!" Bill had two pigs.

A worthy Sunday school superintendent was also the village dry goods merchant, and it is only just to him to say that he was energetic and efficient both in secular and religious pursuits. He had told most eloquently the lesson of the day, and at the conclusion he looked about the room and enquired encouragingly: "Now has anyone a question to ask?" Slowly and timidly a little girl raised her hand. "Ah, I see that there is a question. Well, what is it, Martha? Don't be afraid. Speak out." The little girl cast down her eyes, fidgeted a minute, twisting her fingers, and then said desperately: "Mr. Brooks, how much are those little red parasols in your window?"

THE NEW YEAR BRIDE

These New Year bells, these New Year bells,
Their clangor echoes far and wide,
Through snow in dells
Their triumph swells,
They ring my love a happy bride,
Joy hearts each note,
As far they float,
And all the air is filled with pride.

These New Year bells, these New Year bells,
How softly mellow rings their tone!
Their joy it wells
In rythmic swells,
And dies far on the azure zone;
And seraphs fair
Muse high in air
That winter's day so fair has grown.

These New Year bells, these New Year bells,
They echo by the mountain side,
Through frozen fells,
They weave their spells,
That ring my love a happy bride.
O'er vale and hill
Two [illegible] thrill,
And earth and air is filled with pride.

Original "Fake" Advertiser Dead.

John Napoleon Bonaparte Little, one of Wheeling's best-known characters, is dead. He was born in Pennsylvania sixty years ago. He went to Wheeling, Va., when a small boy, and has been a resident ever since, except the time he spent in the Union army during the late war.

He was known far and wide as the proprietor of "Pa" Little's celebrated Philadelphia cream pop. One of his great fakes was a corn lotion.

Twenty years ago he advertised that on a certain Sunday afternoon he would leap from the suspension bridge into the Ohio River, eighty feet below. The whole town turned out, and excursions were run by boat and rail for fifty miles. Little's cream pop and confectionery store was at the bridge entrance, and he kept seven clerks going all that day. When the hour arrived, "Pa" appeared wrapped in a flag, and announced that he had decided to postpone the jump till the river rose to within three feet of the bottom of the bridge. He cleared nearly $1,000 on the deal.

Another time he advertised that he would make a balloon ascension from the front of his store. This drew as big a crowd, and when the time came he appeared with a huge paper balloon, fired it and balanced himself in the seat, but it would not rise. He used many other dodges to advertise himself and business, and all were successful.

His wife, who was equally adept in helping along business, died a year ago. He leaves no relatives, and the G.A.R. post attended to his funeral.—New York "Journal."

Applied knowledge: "Spell ferment and give its definition," requested the teacher. "F-e-r-m-e-n-t, to work," responded a diminutive maiden. "Now place it in a sentence, so that I may be sure you understand its meaning," said the teacher. "In the summer I would rather play out-of-doors than ferment in the schoolhouse," returned the small scholar.—Wisconsin "Journal of Education."

"My little man," said the visiting pastor, "I am afraid you've been fighting. A black eye! Don't you want me to pray with you?" "Naw," said the good little man; "run home and pray with your own kid. He's got two black eyes."—Philadelphia "Press."

THE PUBLIC VERDICT.

The public verdict is immensely in favor of Paine's Celery Compound. It is the great family medicine of the present day and never fails to do what it promises. Paine's Celery Compound will permanently cure kidney disease, liver complaint, ills resulting from impure blood, dyspepsia and stomach derangements. We sell the kind that cures. H. S. Yankee Advertising in Germany.

"One coming into New York or any other American city must perforce be impressed with the virtues of somebody's soap or pain-killer, painted in letters that seem to fill the landscape, and in London the trams and 'busses are one mass of travelling advertisements," remarks Ray Stannard Baker in the "Outlook." "This disfigurement is unknown in Germany, and yet the Germans have their own effective methods of proclaiming the excellence of their wares. Like everything else, advertising is limited by law; the cities provide certain large wooden columns at street intersections upon which placards may be pasted, and the streets are not disfigured by dead walls bearing patent medicine advertisements. Then, again, look at the gimcrack toy which your boy is playing with, and you will find upon it the words, 'Made in Germany,' and, if you travel in Germany, you will find that you are very persistently plied with circulars and pamphlets by post and otherwise. Last summer Barnum & Bailey's circus visited Germany for the first time, and brought with it American methods of advertising. I am not exaggerating when I say that they paralyzed the Germans—both paralyzed and scandalized them. They didn't think it possible for any business enterprise to make so much noise; it was positively undignified. For the circus managers bought up store windows and store fronts by the hundreds, and their enormous colored prints, such as had never before been seen in Germany, told the wonders of the show to gaping multitudes. They disapproved of all this, but they went to the show."

Doubled in Number

(From the Appeal to Reason)

THE municipal undertaking in England have doubled in number in less than two years. Liverpool has reduced the electricity 50 per cent paid all charges and maintenance, and made a profit of $50,000 for the city treasury. In Leeds the town reduced rates, and made a profit of $40,000 per year, which is increasing. Of the 177 street car systems in the nation 170 belong to the cities. In Glasgow since the city took the street cars it has increased the mileage 40 per cent, and increased the number of cars 100 per cent, has increased the wages of the employees, clothes them, and has cut four hours a day from their worktime, and has made a profit of $500,000 a year for the city. A similar story is that of Liverpool. London owns 78 miles of its street cars, but operates only 24 of these, the rest being leased out. On the city-operated lines the rates have been reduced, have an all-night service, the employees work three hours less than on other lines, and made a profit of $350,000 the first year. Last year on street cars Leeds made $150,000, Bradford $35,000, Nottingham $40,000, Hull, $145,000, Sheffield $100,000. These figures are taken from the London Clarion. We prefer to have corporations rob us and bribe City Councils in this country.

Don't Allow Operation for Cancer

There is a simpler, safer and more effective Method of Treatment.

Dr. J. C. Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U.S.A., in a paper he read before the Ohio State Medical Society, May 1896, said: "I have operated in a considerable number of cases of Cancer recently, and with one exception all have died within fourteen months after the operation."

This statement of a prominent Surgeon, should make any one suffering from cancer, hesitate before submitting to operation and consider carefully the evidence offered on behalf of the new Constitutional remedy, which cures Cancers, Tumors and all malignant growths, without the necessity of operation. It is a simple vegetable medicine that searches out and destroys the cancer growths, completely eradicates the disease, and at the same time, builds up and invigorates the system.

Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., will be pleased to send full particulars of this treatment, in a plain sealed wrapper.

A Record Breaker

Mr. S. F. Redmond, a well known farmer in Otonabee, has proven the value of good tillage to the soil. Last season he took 71 large loads of hay off a field of 17 acres, as a first crop and from the second crop Mr. Fred McIntyre threshed 114 bushels of red clover seed. Mr. Redmond believes in keeping the soil built up and the above shows the results of his labors.

Police Court News

An assault case came up before Police Magistrate Dumble, yesterday morning at the Police Court, in which Robert Biggs charged Robert Bailley with assault, said to have been committed on Jan 1st. After hearing the evidence the Magistrate dismissed the case.

An information was laid against both parties for disorderly conduct and it was proven that Bailley was acting on the defensive, consequently, Biggs, the plaintiff, in the first case was fined $2 and costs, amounting to $4.25 in all.

PAINES CELERY COMPOUND

Should Be Used This Month By All Rheumatic Sufferers

IT IS THE ONLY MEDICINE THAT CURES CHRONIC AND COMPLICATED CASES

It Has Brought Happy Results To Thousands in the Past.

Are you suffering from cruel rheumatism in any of its forms? If you are a victim, your duty is plain. You must begin by furnishing the body with needed nervous energy as fast as you can, and get a richer and purer blood supply.

Paine's Celery Compound is a heaven-sent blessing to tortured and helpless rheumatism victims. It quickly expels poison and acid from the blood, builds up the weakened system, regulates the nerves and gives that true health that conduces to happiness and contentment. If you value life, do not allow your troubles to run on unchecked. Use Paine's Celery Compound this very week and avoid the many dangers of closing winter, a time fatal for rheumatic sufferers. Paine's Celery Compound cures surely and permanently.

FIGHT SMALLPOX IN ASYLUM

Trustees of Home for Feeble-Minded Take Action in Meeting.

Springfield, Ill., Jan. 7.—The trustees of the state home for the feeble minded were forced to meet in Springfield today owing to the prevalence of smallpox in the institution at Lincoln, where the regular meetings are usually held. After transacting routine business the trustees adopted resolutions deploring the appearance of the disease among the children and instructing the superintendent and physicians to coöperate with the state board of health in its efforts to eradicate the disease.

MR. R. C. McHARRIE DEAD

PASSED AWAY AT SIX O'CLOCK YESTERDAY EVENING

A Death That Will Cause Universal Sorrow—Heart Failure the Cause

Mr. R. C. McHarrie is dead. The end came yesterday evening, about six o'clock in his apartments, in the Bank of Commerce building. Mr. McHarrie had not been feeling well during Saturday evening and Sunday, but no apprehension was felt concerning him by his friends. Yesterday afternoon he became worse, and Dr. Halliday was summoned.

There was difficulty with his stomach, severe vomiting during the afternoon having taken place, which greatly weakened him. Suddenly his heart stopped beating, and he was dead.

Mr. McHarrie succeeded Mr. Mangan, about four years ago, as local manager Bank of Commerce. His genial and kindly disposition gained for him hosts of friends. Under his management the business of the Bank rapidly increased.

Mr. McHarrie was only about 42 years of age. He was born in Scotland, where relatives reside. Last night Mr. Coleplin cabled the sad news of his death.

Arrangements for the funeral will be announced to-morrow.

SURRENDERED

To Hot Biscuits and Warm Pie.

Bombarding the stomach with hot biscuits and warm pie, plenty of butter, bacon, greasy potatoes, and a few other choice delicacies will finally cause the fortifications to give way. Then how to build back on good food is worth knowing.

A man in Factoryville, Pa., attacked his stomach in about this way and says: "The sign of surrender was plain in my white, colorless face. At that time every article of food distressed me, and heartburn kept me in continued misery. I liked all sorts of breakfast foods but they did not agree with me. Of course, much of the food that I ate contained nourishment, but my stomach could not get the nourishment out. I tried pepsin and other aids to digestion which worked for a time and then gave out.

Finally I reasoned, when in an extremity, that if the stomach could not digest the food why not take some food that was already digested like Grape-Nuts. So I started in on Grape-Nuts and the new food won my palate straightway and agreed with me beautifully.

The heavy, oppressive feeling disappeared and I became thoroughly impressed with the new food and began to improve at once. Little by little my strength came back and slowly and surely I gained my lost weight. The wasted tissues and muscles built up, and to-day I am well, buoyant and strong.

I unreservedly give the chief credit to Grape-Nuts which met me in a crisis and brought me over the dark period of despondency. Nothing else did it for nothing else could be endured.

Please withhold my name." Name can be given upon application to the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

PROCLAMATION.

Under and by virtue of the provisions of the Act respecting Vaccination and Inoculation—Rev'd. St. Ont. Cap. 249, I Thomas Henry Gerald Denne, Esquire, Mayor of the Town of Peterborough do hereby issue this Proclamation warning the public that Section 15 of the said Act is in force, and that the Council of the said Town has under the said Section ordered the vaccination or re-vaccination of all persons resident in the Municipality who have not been vaccinated within seven years.

The Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

PATENTED 10TH [illegible] 14.

For hard or soft coal, coke or peat. The only coal stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

THE STAR is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion——why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces

THE STAR has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

THE STAR is 25 per cent. more economical than any other stove.

More than 5,000 are in use in the lower provinces.

PRICE LIST

GEN. FRENCH SCORES CLEARS CAPE COLONY

He Reports that the Boer Invasion is Broken---Boers Reduced in Numbers

SYSTEM OF POLICE TO KEEP THEM IN CHECK

Invasion of Cape Colony Has Become a Thing of the Past—Combined Caution and Dash Tell

London, Jan. 7.—News of great importance has been received by the War Office in the form of a despatch from Lord Kitchener. General French, by the exercise of that combined caution and dash which have made him famous in South Africa, and have caused him to be distinguished as almost the only British general who has not suffered reverses, has at last succeeded in crippling the power of the Boer invaders of Cape Colony. He informs Lord Kitchener that "the Boers are so reduced in number as to require only an elaborate police system to keep them in check." This indicates that when Lord Kitchener, choose the hero of Elandslaagte, Colesberg, and the ride to Kimberley, to take charge of operations in Cape Colony, he did the best thing that could possibly have been imagined. The process of clearing out the Boers has been slow, awfully slow, but General French has not flinched, his perseverance and attention to detail have been so admirable that now a few scattered bands of marauders are all that remain of the once powerful commandos which a year ago terrorized the loyal inhabitants of the Cape, and even penetrated within sight of Cape Town itself. After this who will say that substantial progress is not being made by Kitchener and his generals?

THE COLTS WIN

The Hockey Match Last Night Resulted in a Victory for the Home Team by 7 to 6

The first match in the junior O.H.A. championship series, took place at the Charlotte street rink last night between the colts, of town, and the Belleville juniors, which resulted in a victory for Peterborough by a small margin of 7 goals to 6.

The teams were very evenly matched. The individuals were all fast skaters and good stick handlers. At half time the score stood 3—0 in favor of Belleville. In the first half the Colts played to hold down the score of their opponents. In the second half the Colts went into win and very short time had the puck flying dangerously near the Belleville goals. The large attendance of spectators cheered lustily and offered all kinds of advice to the local team and the din at times was deafening. The teams lined up as follows.

PETERBOROUGH

Goal,—Davidson; Point, Hamilton; Cover Point, H. Armstrong; Forwards Robinson, Whitcroft, R. Armstrong, Cameron.

BELLEVILLE.

Goal Rainbow; Point Wallace; Cover Point, Adams; Forwards, Burrows, Allen Huff, Sullivan.

Goal Umpires,—J. Goodman and W. R. Cameron.

Referee,—Mr. E. Wasson.

On the Peterboro forward line Whitcroft and Roy Armstrong covered themselves with credit. They are both fast men and seemed to be in all parts of the rink at the same time. As a goal keeper, Davidson proved his metal, the Belleville's gave him many a hard tussle for the puck but with great skillfulness he kept the rubber out.

Mr. Wasson performed the duties of umpire to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

The game was fast and furious but rough play was not indulged in to any extent. The return match will be played in Belleville in a few days, when we hope our boys will again come out victorious.

HIS SEAT WILL BE IN PRISON

Arthur Lynch to be Arrested Upon Setting Foot on English Soil

THE CAPTURE OF ERASMUS.

British Troops Made Successful Night March and Surrounded His Force—Six Months' Bag of Boers

London, Dec. 7.—Col. Arthur Lynch recently elected to the Commons to represent Galway, will be prevented from taking the seat. As soon as he sets foot on English soil he will be arrested, charged with treason. Lynch does not deny that he aided the Boers but says he will take the seat unless prevented by force.

THE CAPTURE OF ERASMUS.

London, Jan. 7.—A correspondent of The Times, who is with Gen. Bruce Hamilton, wiring from Davidsdale, South-east Transvaal, last Friday, gives details of a Boer party on Friday morning. Information having been obtained that the Boers were near Amsterdam, Simpson's and Rawlinson's columns started early Thursday evening. The evidence of Kaffirs whom the troops met en route was conflicting, but the enemy's trail was found at 3 o'clock in the morning, and after it had been followed along a long winding valley the Boers were surrounded at dawn. A few of them escaped. Forty surrendered, including Commandant Erasmus and the remainder of Pretorius' commando. Two other Boers were subsequently caught with 300 cattle. The same evening another group of Boers was surprised near the British camp, and twenty were captured, with five wagons.

CHURCHILL A SOLDIER.

London, Jan. 7.—The appointment of Winston Churchill, M.P., to a captaincy in the Queen's Own Oxfordshire Hussars, Imperial Yeomanry, to fill a vacancy, caused by the promotion of his cousin, the Duke of Marlborough, to the rank of major, is announced. Churchill wears more decorations than any other man in the regiment.

RESULTS IN SIX MONTHS.

London, Jan. 7.—The Cape Town correspondent of the Times says the summary of weekly official reports from the end of last June to the end of December shows 1,142 Boers were killed, [illegible] wounded, 7,000 captured and [illegible] surrendered.

Poor Girl, Pity Her.

Growing! Yes, into weakness, but not strength. Studies—plenty of them. Tired, of course she is, and weak too. Does not eat enough, and digests far less than enough. This condition is so frequent, but how seldom noticed even by fond parents. Give her Ferrozone, then watch her appetite improve, her cheeks and lips grow ruddy, her step elastic, her spirits bouyant. All this simply the result of eating and digesting enough, making blood, and thereby strengthening the nerve and brain power. Ferrozone gives a woman's strength to weak girls. Your daughter or wife needs Ferrozone. Get it today.

BOERS RUSHED THE BLOCKHOUSES

But British Reinforcements Were Sent from a Neighboring Post

TWO OFFICERS WERE WOUNDED

The Block House Retaken—Boer Convoy Captured at Schaapkraal—Commandant Haasbrock Killed

Bloemfontein, Jan. 7.—A Boer force of forty men attacked a blockhouse near Thaba 'N'Chu recently, defended by a sergeant and three privates. The enemy advanced under cover of darkness and our men, supposing them to be a British patrol, were surprised and overpowered. Reinforcements were sent from a neighboring fort, and in the sharp firing which followed, two British officers were wounded. The Boers retired.

General Baden-Powell, commander-in-chief of the South African Constabulary, arrived here yesterday. It is expected that he will proceed to Pretoria at once.

DE WET'S GALLOPER CAPTURED.

Pretoria, Jan. 7.—After a forced march of thirty miles Colonel Mackenzie's column captured a Boer convoy at Schaapkraal. Seventeen prisoners and considerable draft stock were taken. Fouche has turned up at Jamestown, where he was engaged by Colonel Munro. Among the prisoners taken by the British was De Wet's despatch rider.

HAASBROCK KILLED.

London, Jan. 7.—Despatches from Winburg indicate that Commandant Haasbrock was killed in a fight near Senekal recently. The engagement lasted for fifteen minutes. The British charged and captured the position. Haasbrock was regarded as a very important Boer leader.

Pain in the Joints.

may be muscular or rheumatic. The joints are hard to get at, and it requires a powerful, penetrating remedy to reach the affected parts. Polson's Nerviline exactly meets the requirements, for it is both powerful and penetrating. The pain is expelled as if by magic, for one drop of Nerviline equals in strength five drops of other remedies. You won't often call the doctor if Nerviline is in the house. Price 25 cents.

AMONG BOER PRISONERS ON ISLAND OF CEYLON

The Burgher Prisoners More War-like Than Ever

They Chafe Under Restraint and Would Like to be Fighting

The War Spirit High Among The Captives

London, Jan. 7.—There are 4,735 Boer prisoners confined on the Island of Ceylon by the British authorities, and of these 4,500 are in the camp at Diyatalawa so I considered myself fortunate when I received permission from Sir West Ridgeway, the governor, to visit that camp, writes H. S. Morrison, formerly a Chicago reporter. The rules regarding visitors are necessarily stringent, and I knew that it would not be possible for me to talk with the men without a permit from some person in authority. But with his excellency's permission the way was clear. I traveled out to Diyatalawa and found it to be situated in an isolated neighborhood, far away from any town, and connected with the railway station and civilization only by an aerial ropeway, which is used to transport fuel and provisions to the persons within the barriers.

The camp is enclosed by a wire entanglement which is ingeniously constructed to prevent the escape of any prisoner. There are two fences of wire netting about ten feet high, and constructed ten feet apart, and between them is a mass of barbed wire, stretched in a way to make it impossible for any person to climb across. Running along this barrier, within the camp, is an insulated wire, which, when stepped upon, rings an alarm in the guard hut. Hence it would not be possible for a prisoner to approach the entanglement without being discovered. It is not surprising, considering this elaborate arrangement, that no Boers have escaped from Diyatalawa.

HOUSING OF THE BOERS.

The huts of the prisoners are encircled by six buildings, where are stationed the British Guards. There are also nine huts for native watchers, who are constantly on the lookout for Boers straying near the gates. The prisoners themselves are accommodated in large wooden buildings, where they both eat and sleep. When the camp was first established about fifty were assigned to each house, but for sanitary reasons this number has been slightly reduced. The beds are fairly comfortable, and during my visit I heard no complaints of the food with which the prisoners are served. It is indeed better than that enjoyed by the British Guard, for the prisoners' rations include butter and jam, two unknown luxuries to Tommy Atkins. The Boers are generally in good health though they found the climate at Ceylon trying at first, and the camp is large enough to allow them plenty of room for exercise and athletic sports.

Having never visited South Africa I hardly knew what to expect of the burghers. I think I was rather disappointed to find them so rough and uncouth in appearance, but of course they had little inducement to keep themselves tidy at Diyatalawa. They were for the most part pleasant to talk with, and had surprisingly few complaints to make of their treatment at the hands of the British. One old gentleman was frank enough to admit that they had been handled with greater consideration than any British prisoner receives in the Transvaal.

"This Governor of Ceylon," he added, "is a proper fine man, and he knows how to deal with people. If he had been down at the Cape in Milner's place the trouble might have been settled long ago."

"I suppose you are in no hurry to obtain your liberty?" I asked.

"No, indeed," replied the burgher, who must have been nearly 70. "I hope De Wet will keep on fighting. I'd rather remain a prisoner for the rest of my life than to see him surrender, and so would most all of us. Our only regret is that we're not down there to help him in his work."

The prisoners vary in age from 15 to 75 years, and are of all degrees of education and wealth. Some of them arrived at Diyatalawa with a considerable sum of money in their possession. This was taken from them, for no prisoner is allowed to have a larger sum than $5 a week. Those who were penniless upon arrival are of course supplied with clothes by the British, and they are permitted to earn money any way they can within the camp. Some assist in making repairs and doing chores for the British officers, and others have established unique stores, in which they sell small merchandise of every description. One enterprising fellow constructed an oven, and with it he now makes a kind of Dutch cake which is relished by the prisoners, and his trade has grown so large that he now employs two assistants. The walls and roof of the bakery are covered with odd bits of canvas, and the exterior is very attractive in appearance. The cakes, like almost everything else within the camp, sell at the price of an English penny, and the baker is said to make quite a profit.

NAMES RECALL BATTLES.

The prisoners of war are fond of indulging their fancy for street nomenclature, and have named the streets between their huts after various towns and battle grounds in the Transvaal. One of the busiest thoroughfares is called "Steynsdorp," and it is here that most of the principal shops are situated. There are the camp grocer, stationer, tobacconist and fruiter, and, as the Boers are inveterate smokers, the tobacconist does the largest business of all. The grocery store under the ownership of Herr Heilman, contains various delicacies for the table, and the prisoners are fond of buying good things to eat when they have a little money to spend. Outside the shop is a sign bearing the significant words "No Credit." Herr Heilman evidently knows his customers.

The camp shoemaker is located in a rickety, tentlike structure, and hither the Boers repair whenever their "understandings" require attention. The business is a profitable one, for the shoemaker, who rejoices in the aristocratic name of Du Plooy, is enabled to employ three assistants. I suggested that he would soon have to enlarge his premises but he replied that he didn't expect to be in Ceylon much longer, claiming, of course, that the war is nearly over. The stationer's, which is a shanty, constructed of bamboo and cocoanut leaves, is leased by J. Rousseau & Co. This high-sounding name suggests the investment of capital, but as far as I could observe his stock consisted mainly of pencils and postal cards and small ebony elephants that are purchased by the Boers as souvenirs of their exile, which is far from being without its entertaining side.

I was surprised to observe the serious occupation of some of the prisoners. One has accomplished some excellent work in painting and water-color drawing, another carves pipes, and a third whom I saw had constructed an organ with his own hands, and without getting any material from without the camp save a little rubber and some bamboo for a part of the pipes. The organ has a fairly good tone, and is now used in the religious services on Sundays. The man who constructed it was originally an organ builder in Johannesburg. He now works in an empty hut, which has been assigned to the prisoners who are industriously inclined, and with him there I saw a man who constructed a lathe for himself, and now turns out dozens of souvenir napkin rings, which are sent to Colombo to be sold. After I had seen these two men doing so much with so little material I decided that the Boers do not lack energy and ingenuity.

There are various arrangements at Diyatalawa for the entertainment of the prisoners. One of the largest structures is known as the recreation hut, and it is accessable to the men at all times of the day and evening. It contains a few tables that are well stocked with books and magazines, which enable the prisoners to pass the time agreeably. At one end of the large room is a substantial stage, which is used for concerts and theatrical entertainments. There is a drop scene, painted by one of the captives depicting the battle of Magersfontein from the Boer point of view. Boxing practice is going on within the hut at all times of the day, and on Sunday it is often used for church services.

LIKE TO PLAY QUOITS.

One of the favorite out-of-door pastimes at the camp is quoits, and the clang of the rings is heard almost continually. As many as thirty games of quoits have been known to be in progress at the same time. Bowling is also popular.

All sorts of athletics are carried on by certain of the younger element in the camp, and there is always great interest in the boxing and running matches when they occur. One of the prisoners named Jim Holloway, was once a well-known boxer, and several young fellows, known as "Jim Holloway's pals," have become under his direction very proficient in the manly art.

There are several notables among the prisoners at Diyatalawa. I was privileged to shake hands with a son of President Kruger, a brother of President Steyn and with three Boer generals. Young Mr. Kruger resembles his father in facial expression and is a man of the characteristic Dopper type. He held the rank of a field cornet in the Boer army. President Steyn's brother was a commandant, and is a man about 40 years old.

The officers are all accommodated in special huts and are treated with great respect by the rank and file of the prisoners. General Roux, otherwise known in South Africa as "the fighting parson," concerns himself greatly with the religious life of the camp, and there are frequent services in the recreation hut and sometimes in the open air. Rev. Mr. Postma, a Dutch clergyman from Pretoria, does the preaching, and the majority of the captives are in attendance at the regular services.

General Olivier is another officer much interested in Christian work. Nearly every prisoner has a Bible of his own, and I was impressed with the evidence of the earnestness of these fighting men. There is no doubt but they firmly believe that God is on their side, and with this knowledge they are likely to fight on as long as life lasts.

My short visit to Diyatalawa taught me more concerning the Boers than I had learned from the reading of many books, and I returned to Colombo feeling that the end of the war is still far off if there are many more at home like these men. They are patient, earnest, hard-working, and their peculiarities are more than offset by their many excellent qualities.

It is indeed fortunate that they are so well understood by Sir West Ridgeway, for otherwise their captivity in Ceylon might be less bearable. This English governor will be given great credit in the future for his treatment of the Boer prisoners at Diyatalawa, and who knows but his humane policy may serve to hasten the end of the war?

Havelock Elections

The elections on Monday for Reeve and Councillors for the village of Havelock, was the most exciting elections held here for years.

For Reeve the vote was very close, Mr. T. Curtis being elected by a majority of 12 votes, over his opponent Mr. Jas. Thompson. The Councillors are, Messrs. Jonas Campany, A. V. Fuller, Jos. Knox and Edward Frizzell.

PRINCIPAL GRANT'S VIEWS OF CANADA

Delivers First Address Since His Recent Illness.

NIGGARDLINESS OF CANADA

Willing to Sacrifice His Children's Blood, But not Her Treasury—Future of Canada.

Kingston, Jan. 6.—There was a large attendance in Convocation Hall this evening to hear Principal Grant's first address since his illness. The university council attended him to the platform. Rev. Dr. Ross conducted the opening exercises, and Dr. Grant then proceeded to deliver his thanksgiving and retrospective address. He was in quite vigorous form, and spoke clearly and distinctly. He took a rest once during the hour's address. He was frequently applauded.

The first part of the principal's address dealt with the confederation of the provinces. Its first principle of political action was that Canada must unite and cultivate a union of hearts and interests. Speaking of the war he said: "Our position is not one to be proud of. We are permitting a few hundreds to be recruited for service, but on condition that make our position more deplorable than ever. We are not to pay a cent of the cost! We give the bravest of our children to die by the bullet or still deadlier enteric; but someone else must pay their wages. We do not grudge the blood of our sons, but with a treasury so full that we go on paying millions for bounties and bonuses to develop resources which are said to be the richest in the world—we grudge food, clothing and transport for them. Let 'the weary Titian' bearing on her back all the common burdens of the Empire in peace and war be at this charge also. Let Canada accept the blood money without a blush. This state of things cannot continue."

The principal then referred to his journey from ocean to ocean, made with Sir Sandford Fleming in 1872, for which he would always be grateful. Since then he had never doubted the future of Canada.

With regard to making Queen's University national by statute, he said:—

"The way is now clear for legislative action, and the trustees at their next annual meeting will consider carefully what changes in the constitution are needed to adapt Queen's to its new position as the public and undenominational university of Eastern Ontario in particular, and of Canada in general."

In conclusion he said:—

"I have spoken of thanksgiving and retrospect. But the past is behind us. May I speak of a vision which has been given to me of the future? I see our university, strong in your love, an ever increasing power for good; our country purging itself of dross, and pressing forward to be in the van of the world's battle; our Empire, as of old, dispenser of justice to all under its flag, and champion of liberty, civil, religious, intellectual and commercial, everywhere; and our common humanity struggling up into the light, slowly but surely, realizing its unity and accomplishing its mission to establish the Kingdom of God upon earth."

DEATH OF MR. J. H. ROPER

Died Suddenly Last Night About Nine O'clock

The many friends of Mr. J. H. Roper will be shocked to hear of his sudden death, which occurred about nine o'clock last night at the residence of Miss Kingan, Brock street. Deceased was well known about town, and was down to business yesterday at the Cereal Co. Works, and appeared in his usual good health. Funeral notice will appear in to-morrow's issue.

Mrs. Stuckey Dead

The death of Mrs. Wm. Stuckey occurred at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. James Ellis, No. 715 George street yesterday morning at the age of 78 years. The deceased lady has been ailing for some weeks. One son and one daughter are left to mourn her death. The son is Benj. Stuckey, Carberry, Man. and the daughter, Mrs. Ellis of town.

The funeral will take place this morning at 6.15 and proceed to the G.T.R. station.

Interment will take place at Fenelon Falls.

BRITISH DEFEAT BOERS BUT SUFFER SEVERELY

Major, 5 Officers and 18 Men Killed, and 28 Men Wounded of the Somersets

BOERS LEFT NINE DEAD ON THE BATTLE FIELD

British Forces Commanded by Major Plomer and Col. Spens—Boer Casualties for the Week

London, Jan. 7.—Advices from South Africa continue to indicate that the wearing down process is proceeding briskly and that the Boers are on all hands melting away before the military training and acquired experience in veldt cunning of Kitchener's generals. One fact which these latter days of the war is bringing forward is that during the progress of the struggle a new class of British officer has sprung into existence, composed of men who have learned the ways of the veldt from contact with the Boers and are now able to beat the enemy at their own game. This is illustrated by the numerous reports of small conflicts which come from all parts of South Africa and which almost invariably result in the fear and capture of small bands of Boers whose cunning apparently is no match for the science and cunning of the new type of British officer. These affairs sometimes cost the British dearly, as the latest report from Lord Kitchener shows. Telegraphing from Johannesburg, under date of Jan. 6, Lord Kitchener reports the occurrence of a number of skirmishes in various parts of the war field. The most serious were at Amersfoort, January 3 and January 4, when Major W. H. P. Plomer and Colonel J. Spens were in contact with Commandant Christian Botha's and Commandant Opperman's commando, and drove the Boers from their positions after considerable fighting, during which the Somerset Light Infantry suffered severely. Major Vallentin and eighteen men were killed and five officers, and twenty-eight men were wounded. The Boers left nine men dead on the field.

Col. Colenbrander surprised Field Cornet Louws' laager at Watervale, January 5, killed five men, captured twenty-nine.

Lord Kitchener mentions other minor surprises and captures.

The week's totals of Boer casualties are twenty-six men killed, nine wounded, two hundred and sixty-one made prisoners, and seventy-two surrendered.

RESOLUTION OF SYMPATHY

To the Widow of the Late J. E. Parsons of Peterborough

At the regular meeting of Court Langton, No. 344, Canadian Order of Foresters, the following resolution was adopted:

Peterborough, Jan. 6th, 1902.

Mrs. J. E. Parsons, 31 McDonel street,
Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Madam,—I have been instructed by the members of Court Langton, No. 344, Canadian Order of Foresters, to express to you our sincere sympathy in the loss you have sustained by the death of your late husband, Mr. J. E. Parsons was long connected with Court Langton and always conducted himself on every occasion in such a manner as to secure the respect and love of all. His death will be a great loss to the Court and Order, and a severe sorrow to all who knew him.

"Offering you again the profound sympathy of the Court in your affliction, I am,

Yours fraternally in L. B. and C.

LEAVING DUMMER.

Rev. Mr. Archibald Has Accepted a New Charge Near Barrie

The many friends of Rev. Mr. Archibald, of Warsaw, and Hall's Glen, will regret to learn that he has decided to remove to another field of work. Mr. Archibald has, during his three years' residence in Dummer, made hosts of warm friends, not only amongst his own parishioners, but also amongst others. He has been appointed to the charge at Craighurst, near Barrie, where he will go next week, succeeding Rural Dean Tenny, now Rector of Omemee.

Rev. Mr. Archibald has many friends in Peterborough, who will regret his departure. He was for two years curate at St. John's church, going from here to Marmora, where he remained eighteen months, before he took up his home in Warsaw.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP OF TELEPHONES

CONSIDERABLE interest is being taken just now in the subject of municipal ownership of telephones. Ottawa will take a vote of the ratepayers this month, and Toronto is gradually approaching the point when the matter will be referred to the people to vote on. The same description of agitation at present is in progress nearly all over England. The Legal Government Journal, a publication devoted to municipal ownership and civic administration generally, has this in reference to the movement in Great Britain.

"Already there are signs of alarm among those who wish to free themselves from the grinding monopoly of the National Telephone company, and we may take it that the New Year will witness renewed activity on the part of provincial municipalities in the direction of the establishment of municipal services, so that some control may be obtained over what has now become a necessity of business life. Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds, Sheffield, Oldham, Halifax, Dublin, Edinburgh, Hull, Brighton, Bournemouth, Stockport, Swansea and other large towns have applied, or are about to apply, for licenses to establish municipal telephone service. We all know that Glasgow and Tunbridge Wells have their municipal systems in working order, and most people are familiar with the terms and conditions of those services. In Lincoln, Hastings, and other smaller towns, the preliminaries have been arranged for the establishment of such services, and in Hull an expert has been engaged by the telephones committee of the corporation to design and superintend the construction of the Hull exchange, to organize the department; and superintend its working until it is got into working order. The Hull corporation's scheme promises every success, and its methods might have been copied by the post office with advantage. Over 1200 subscribers' names were registered before even the designs were approved and the system formulated.

"A preliminary report on the telephone service of Bristol has recently been presented to the corporation by a special committee appointed to investigate the whole question. From this report we learn that the rates and charges of the company are as follows: Ten Party Line: For this service a subscriber is one of ten on the same circuit. He is not required to make any annual payment, nor is he charged anything for inward calls; that is to say, he can be called up by other subscribers free of any charge to himself. In respect of outward calls—that is to say, calls which a subscriber himself originates — the charges will be as follows. For each effective call to a subscriber on the same exchange, 1d. For each effective call to any subscriber on any other exchange in the area, 2d. Each subscriber on this service is required to guarantee to make or pay for calls to the value of at least 2d per diem. The money will be collected by means of slot machines attached to the telephone instrument."

It is proposed to charge one-third the monopoly rate in Grantham.

Municipal Responsibility

MONTREAL, Mar.—The decision against the city in which a lady was awarded damages for injuries sustained by slipping on the sidewalk during a winter day, should make people thoughtful. The courts held that although the weather had been very changeable on the day in question, the fact that ice had previously been allowed to accumulate there was ground for awarding damages. This conveys a lesson. If the sidewalks be kept clear of ice and snow and then some stress of weather causes an unusually dangerous condition, there may be some chance of escaping payment of damages. When the ice is allowed to remain, bad weather is not accepted as an excuse.

Street Grades

The grades of streets necessarily depend mainly upon the topography of the site. Wherever possible, it is desirable that grades be uniform between cross streets.

In establishing grades for new streets through unimproved property, they may be laid with reference only to obtaining the most desirable gradients for the street within a proper limit of cost. But where improvements have already been made, and located with reference to the natural surface of the ground, it is frequently a matter of extreme difficulty to give a desirable grade to the streets without injury to adjoining properties. In such cases it becomes a question of how far individual interests shall be sacrificed to the general good. It may be said in this connection that adjustments to new grades are usually accomplished much more easily than would be anticipated, and when accomplished the possession of a desirable grade is of very considerable value to adjoining property. Too great timidity should not, therefore, be felt in regard to making necessary changes because of the fear of injuring property in the locality.

Where a grade is made continuous between intersecting streets would be nearly level, it is frequently necessary to put a summit in the middle of the block and give a light gradient downward in each direction to the cross-streets in order to provide for surface drainage. The amount of slope necessary to provide for proper drainage depends upon the character of the surface and smoothness of the gutter. For a surface of earth or macadam the slope should not be less than about 1 in 100, and for paved streets from 1 in 200 to 1 in 250.

In some cases it may be possible to give sufficient slope to gutters to carry off the surface-water by making the gutter deeper at the ends than in the middle of the block without making a summit in the crown of the street. The curb in such case would be made level or of uniform gradient.—Municipal World.

A Miracle Explained.

The vagaries of memory are some of the most interesting of those connected with the human mind and body. Why do we forget certain things and remember others? Myriads of these irregularities are as yet unaccounted for; perhaps not even the cleverest metaphysician will ever account for them.

Professor James reminds us how something which we have tried in vain to recall will afterward, when we have given up the attempt, "saunter into the mind," as Emerson says, as innocently as if it had never been summoned.

Again, bygone experiences will revive after years of oblivion, often as the result of some cerebral disease or accident.

Such a case is the one quoted by Coleridge of a young woman in Germany who could neither read nor write, but who was said to be possessed of a devil because, in a fever, she was heard raving in Latin, Greek, and in an obscure rabbinical dialect of Hebrew. Whole pages of her talk were written down, and were found to consist of sentences intelligible in themselves, but not having the slightest connection with one another. To say that she was possessed of a devil was the easiest way of accounting for the matter.

At last the mystery was cleared up by a physician, who traced back the girl's history until he learned that at the age of nine she was taken to live at the house of an old pastor, a great Hebrew scholar, and that she remained there until the pastor's death. It had been for years the old man's custom to walk up and down a passage near the kitchen, and read to himself in a loud voice.

His books were examined, and among them many of the passages taken down at the young woman's bedside were identified. The theory of demoniacal possession was abandoned.

Passenger cars (or coaches, as they are usually designated) in early days were simply stage coach bodies mounted on four wheels, and as time progressed several were linked together, thus forming a "train."

Partridges' Eggs.

New Orleans "Times-Democrat."

"But few persons are aware of the fact," said a well-known physician yesterday, "but it is true, nevertheless, that the egg of the partridge is one of the most nutritious things in the world. They are not used for eating purposes except in very rare cases, and then it generally happens in remote rural districts. I have known negro families in the State of Louisiana during the laying season to live on the eggs of partridges. And they would flourish handsomely and grow fat on account of the rich properties of the eggs. These eggs, of course, never find their way into the market, because they are never taken from their nest except by such persons as I have mentioned, and they rob the nests, I suppose, because their principal food supply comes from this source. Quail meat comes pretty high in the market at all times, and the average man will find it more profitable to spare the eggs and wait for the birds when the hunting season rolls around. These men would pass a hundred nests in one day without disturbing an egg. The sport of hunting the birds is an additional incentive. The average negro does not care so much about this aspect of the case. He figures that the white man, having the best gun and the best dog, will beat him to the bird. So he goes after the eggs. One partridge will lay anywhere from a dozen to twenty eggs, and a nest is a good find. I know of many families in rural sections who feast on these eggs in the laying season. I have tried the egg myself as an experiment. I found it peculiarly rich. It has a good flavor, is very palatable and, in fact, is altogether a very fine thing to eat. Really I believe that the egg has more nutrition in it than the fully developed bird, but, of course, as one of the ... of the game in the field. I would like to discourage the robbery of the nests."

The Fad

Of the modern woman is health by exercise. It's an excellent fad, provided that it is always remembered that exercise cannot cure womanly diseases. Indeed, where such diseases exist exercise is apt to aggravate the condition rather than to help it.

The first step toward establishing the general health is to establish the local womanly health. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures womanly diseases which undermine the general health. It establishes regularity, dries enfeebling drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. When these are cured, backache, headache and nervousness are things of the past. The universal testimony of weak and sickly women, cured by "Favorite Prescription," is this: "It has made me feel like a new woman."

"My wife has used three bottles of Dr. Pierce's medicine, and I never saw such results," writes A. B. Haynes, Esq., of Aurora, Lawrence Co., Mo. "It was wonderful in its work. We had used lots of medicine, also had one of the best physicians in Aurora, but my wife got no better; we heard one pitiful groan after another, day and night. A friend handed me a copy of Dr. Pierce's book, the Common Sense Medical Adviser, and after reading the testimonials of Dr. Pierce's successful treatment, and seeing that the cases described were similar to my wife's, I bought for her a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Before she had taken all of the medicine she was up and helping to do the work. She has taken three bottles and is now about well. Has better health than she has had for years."

Purveyor by Appointment to His Majesty the Cat.

Those of the public who may imagine that there is no room for initiative and ingenuity in the cats' meat trade, says the London "Chronicle," are vastly mistaken. In Kensington an enterprising young fellow is said to be making a fortune through the happy idea of supplying, on request, fish instead of meat for the cats on his round. The pets of the prosperous can obtain meat at almost any time, and they will not look, for the most part, at the wares of the cats' meat man. But no cat can resist a tasty bit of fish, be it offered when it may, and a huge success is the result of the innovation. Again, there are certain purveyors who take trouble to obtain a close knowledge of every single animal on their rounds and its little peculiarities. This knowledge once gained, the cats' meat man buys and cuts his portions accordingly, taking care that each cat gets its favorite bit. All chance of rivalry is removed at once by this means, for a cat will not for weeks, unless driven by desperate hunger, touch the strange cuts of a new purveyor.

Asthma Cure Free

Asthmalene Brings Instant Relief and Permanent Cure in All Cases,

Sent ABSOLUTELY FREE on receipt of postal. Write your name and address plainly.

CHAINED FOR TEN YEARS

HAY FEVER

ASTHMA

EVERY BRINGS RELIEF.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-size bottle."

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER

Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO.:

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows at 130th street, New York. I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the 1st of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully,

O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle and I am ever grateful. I have a family of four children and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL.

And then, with a few more courteous, genial words, Dr. Stewart moved away, looking back as he went to add:—

"I have told the young lady I will gladly place my carriage at her disposal to take her to whatever hotel she may decide on. I will send it back when I have gone on to my appointment, which is important."

When Lord Otway went in again he found Katharine lying back with her right foot all enveloped in bandages. The porter had warned Dr. Stewart they might be wanted.

"The doctor refuses to let me go to Ledstone," she said hurriedly, nervously. Already this young man seemed half a friend. She felt she might count on his help.

"I think he is wise," was his answer, given very gently.

Katharine's lips trembled.

"What am I to do?" she murmured.

"If you will come home with me, my dear, for a day or two, I shall be most delighted to have you. I am only a quiet old maid, and live in a very humble way, but my best is at your disposal, child, if you care to accept it, and in the meantime you can send over to Ledstone for your mother."

Katharine's hand went out to her.

"I have no mother," she said; "but I have a dear friend, with whom I live. I must send to her and tell her, or she will get wretched and frightened about me."

"Yes, send, my dear, and let me persuade you to come home with me! My name is Caroline Weston, and I will make you as comfortable as I can; the sight of your sweet young face will more than repay me."

Lord Otway gave the little old maid one of his brightest smiles, while Katharine tried to murmur her thanks.

All at once she felt she could bear no more.

The horrible strain she had had to endure during the last two days had worn her nervous system to a thread. How she lived through them she could not tell. All she could remember — with horrible clearness— was that shrill death scream, that boy's white face, as it was swallowed up in the pit's darkness. She had returned to Rose Cottage as in a dream; she had gone through the ghastly farce of eating, moving and speaking, as though nothing had come to alter the monotonous tenor of her life. She had dimly heard Gordon's whispered words, giving her directions how to act, before he rushed up to London, greatly to his mother's disappointment, who little knew what important business it was that should thus cut short his unexpected visit.

Katharine, as she paced her small bed-room during the long, terrible night— hours when all was still and quiet— went over and over again the horrible scene which would be stamped on her memory forever, and wondered vaguely how it was her brain still lived and worked at such a time. It all flashed back to her again as she lay with closed eyes on the cushions in the railway station.

The intolerable bursting sense of fear that Gordon's crime would be discovered, and the mother's heart be torn with anguish, shame and despairing grief; the effort to keep her emotion hidden from her cousin; the growing loathing and horror of the man for whom she was about to sacrifice herself. Then the hurried note from Gordon telling her he had arranged everything; the license was taken, the one day necessary had expired, and he was awaiting her in Northminster for the fulfillent of her promise that was to give him safety. London had been impossible. Katharine could not have gone there without curiosity. She occasionally went over to Northminster to shop for Mrs. Smythe and herself, as Gordon knew. Therefore the marriage was fixed to take place at the registrar's office.

In all the long forty-eight hours that had elapsed before the note reached her, not a sign of the murdered man came forward to convict and condemn the murderer; and now Gordon Smythe was safe, this hot July afternoon, as he was whizzed through the country to London. For Katharine Brereton had not failed; she had kept her word, and was his wife—wife to a man who was to her the most horrible thing in the whole world!

With this burdening her heart and brain, was it a wonder that when her accident came, and she found herself compelled to stay in Northminster for days, that Katharine's endurance broke down, and that she clutched at the friendly services these two strangers offered her?

"Thank you, thank you!" was all she could murmur, and Miss Weston cheerfully refused to hear any protest, and chatted on warmly how she and her old servant, Dorcas, would soon make the poor little foot well again.

"And you must send for your friend. Let me see; what can we do? You say she is frightened at telegrams— and no wonder, the nasty things; I hate them myself! Well, could we not send a note by the guard of the next train?"

"I have a better plan," said Lord Otway, [illegible]. "I am just going to send Dr. Stewart's carriage, as he suggested, and then, when you have been comfortably settled and left in this kind lady's most generous care, if you will give me your friend's address, I will go over to Ledstone, explain matters, and bring her back with me to-night. No! please, don't thank and— and don't, please, don't cry; I can't bear it!"

With that the young man turned away hurriedly, and having despatched a porter to see if the carriage was coming, walked to and fro till the answer in the affirmative came; and then, in the easiest and most charming way, he insisted on lifting the girl's slender figure, and carrying it, alone and unassisted, to the brougham.

Words of gratitude trembled on Katharine's pale lips, but she was in such pain she could only muster up strength to give him Mrs. Smythe's address, and whisper him not to frighten the gentle little creature. Then she fell back on the soft-cushioned seat with closed eyes, as the horses started away slowly, leaving Lord Otway standing, hat in hand, staring after the brougham like a man in a dream.

Simmonds, the porter, recalled him to himself.

"The racket's 'ere, my lord," he said respectfully. "It came by the last train more nor an hour ago."

Lord Otway started suddenly.

"I had forgotten all about it, Simmonds," he muttered hurriedly. "You must take it up to Maple Tree House, after all. There is something for your trouble; and here, Simmonds," hastily scribbling a few lines on a page of his note-book, "tell Marshall to give that to Lady Blanche, and say she is not to be alarmed if I am not home till late!"

...And then, utterly regardless of his costume, Lord Otway walked to the booking-office and took a ticket for Ledstone. He suddenly felt a curious sensation come stealing over him that he would take a ticket for Kamschatka, or the world's end, if thereby he might secure the exquisite delight of gazing into Katharine's lovely eyes.

CHAPTER V.

The doctor's large, roomy brougham went through Northminster's wide, picturesque streets at a nice even pace, but notwithstanding all the coachman's care the jolting caused Katharine most terrible pain, and good-hearted Miss Weston was growing quite anxious as she gazed at the sweet face, all drawn and contracted with suffering, the pallor increasing every moment.

She regretted then that she had not permitted Lord Otway to accompany them in the drive to her house, but she had urged him to start for Ledstone instead, divining rightly that the girl was in great anxiety that Mrs. Smythe should be spared all alarm about her, and that she would rather send to her than enlist Lord Otway's further services on her own behalf. Still the little old maid, brave and kind as she was, could not help regretting that that nice young man had not come with her, and it was with extreme joy that she discovered Dr. Stewart standing on her doorstep as the carriage pulled up.

"I am in excellent time," he said, coming forward to open the door. "I just met the porter running up with a message for Lord Otway, to the Maple Tree House, and he told me you had kindly come forward to this young lady's rescue; now, would you like to make any arrangements first, before my man and I lift her out, because I should wish to have her kept perfectly quiet when we have placed her down, so—"

"I will speak to Dorcas," was Miss Weston's reply, and she tripped up the spotless steps, and after a brief interview with her old-fashioned maid, returned quickly.

"Everything is quite ready; I always keep my spare room aired and prepared. Dorcas will lead the way. Oh, Dr. Stewart, I am very glad you are here. Poor child, poor dear, she looks so bad!"

"Oh, she will be all right in a day or two. Now, if all is ready."

And then Katharine found herself lifted out and carried through a low, wide hall, and up a quaint old staircase, when she became unconscious.

Her first real sensation on awakening was a curious one; she missed something— what was it? Her eyes went round vaguely yet eagerly to catch the tender gaze of those deep blue orbs that had been bent over her just now, her ear waited to catch the frank, manly tones; she started as a voice came to her.

"There, my dear, you are better now, aren't you? See, this is Dorcas, who will nurse you; she is the finest nurse in the world, is Dorcas, and—"

But recollection had suddenly returned to the girl; she put out her hand and drew the other's worn one to her lips.

"How good you are, how good," she murmured, as two tears rolled down her cheeks and fell on the white, linen sheet.

"There, there, you must not excite yourself, must she, Dorcas? and don't worry about your friend. Lord Otway started off to fetch her at once; the last train from Ledstone reaches here at half-past ten, so we can't expect them to arrive till then. Now, Dorcas, what do you say to some of your nutritious beef tea?" And so Miss Weston chatted on, trying to cheer the girl's spirits, which she thought were affected by the pain of her injured foot.

"If father can see me now what torture he must be enduring; his only child, his little Kattie linked for life to a black-hearted, treacherous murderer, having the memory of that poor, slain boy forever on her mind; her peace, her happiness gone, unutterably gone! Ah," thought the girl, bitterly, miserably, as she lay with closed eyes in what Miss Weston imagined was a nice sleep—"Ah, far better that death should come and end it all; far better that I should have been killed this afternoon! Why did he not leave me on the track? He would have done far more for me than by saving my life!"

And then came a strong wave of self-reproach, and she felt a pang go through her aching heart, as she recalled the gentle words, the strong comfort of his presence, and felt, once again, his deep, tender gaze melt, as it were, into her very soul.

And, with that memory waking a curious sensation in her troubled breast, Katharine gradually dropped into the first real sleep that had come to her since her trouble came.

* * * * *

Lord Otway had no difficulty in finding Rose Cottage. He picked his way through the narrow streets, taking, with great good nature, the somewhat disagreeable chaff and jokes, the factory hands flung at his attire as he went.

"Oh, something has happened to Katharine! I know it— I know it!" she cried, as the young man asked her if she were Mrs. Smythe. "Oh, tell me quick, is she dead?"

In an instant Lord Otway had reassured her and explained all, and the color flickered back into Lucy Smythe's pale cheeks.

"I tried to persuade Katharine not to go to Northminster to-day; it was so hot, and I had a sort of presentiment something would happen, but she would go. She is so good; she wanted to make me a cool dress, and we get things better at Northminster than here. Is she very much hurt, poor darling? It is so good of you to come, but Katharine always thinks of everything; she knows how stupidly nervous I am— and, oh, please come in and rest and will you have something to eat? Sarah has laid supper; we were waiting for Katharine. I will get ready at once, and go to her, dear child. She is so sweet. I love her as if she were my own daughter. Do come in and have some supper!" and, talking hurriedly, with tears springing nervously to her eyes, Mrs. Smythe drew Lord Otway up the path, despite his protests.

"I shall be hurt if you do not rest and refresh yourself," Mrs. Smythe said.

So he gave in and followed her into the pretty little cottage, where Mrs. Smythe, having first ensconced him in the dining-room at the dainty table, fled to the kitchen to tell Sarah all about it.

She lives here. This was her home. There stood her work-basket with the pile of unfinished sewing peeping out. There the little old piano with her songs strewn on the top. The little kitten that came purring about his feet had been kissed and caressed by her.

It was only a simple country home, but it seemed beautiful to him, haunted as he was by that lovely face, those marvelous eyes, the exquisite purity of the whole countenance. He knew he had not guessed wrong; it was a delight to feel that she was just what he had imagined. Lucy Smythe's tender love and adoration of her came as a testimony to him and he needed one.

His eyes, going round the room, suddenly fell on a portrait of Katharine. It was one she had taken in Northminster as a surprise gift for her cousin. Lord Otway took it up. It was good but not half good enough. But what photograph or picture could portray her face as it really was!

He replaced the picture, and was turning away, when his brows contracted. There, staring at him with a bold, insolent smile, was that evil-eyed handsome man he had seen in the afternoon. Lord Otway shuddered. It seemed profanation, desecration, to put those two faces together.

At that very moment Mrs. Smythe came hurrying in full of apologies and entreaties that he would do justice to her supper, and the young man woke from his troubled thoughts.

"Tell me," he said suddenly, pointing to the portrait, "who—who is this man?"

Mrs. Smythe's face flushed with proud tenderness.

"That is my boy, sir— my only child, Gordon, the dearest and best son ever mother possessed. I am sorry he is not here; he went back to London two days ago. I should like you to have met him. Is he not handsome? Ah! you must forgive me, sir; remember, I am his mother, and see him through eyes of love."

Lord Otway was silent, but a sense of oppression was on him. To please his gentle hostess, he ate a few mouthfuls, but somehow he did not feel at ease with that dark, evil face staring at him, and he breathed a sigh of relief as Sarah announced that Dr. Weathering has sent his carriage to drive Mrs. Smythe to the station, and they passed out into the air.

Lord Otway waited until he had seen Mrs. Smythe go up stairs under Miss Weston's care, then, having heard the latest news of the invalid, he took his departure and walked sharply back in the moonlight to Maple Tree House.

It was considerably past eleven when he entered his aunt's drawing-room, but Lady Blanche was up waiting for him, and Miss Mostyn was keeping her hostess company, and, to judge from the frown on her face, was not in the best of tempers.

"My dear Ormonde, what on earth has happened— where have you been?" was Lady Blanche's greeting.

Lord Otway sank into a chair a trifle wearily; but, tired as he was, he gave his aunt a full account of his afternoon's work.

"I suppose you will never outgrow your very Quixotic disposition to rush about and slave yourself to death for other people," she observed.

Miss Mostyn's face that had grown suddenly clear when Lord Otway entered, was now clouded again.

"It is really very, very good of you," she said, rising languidly, and bidding Lady Blanche good-night. "You deserve to be canonized, Lord Otway. But don't you think you have taken a great deal of unnecessary trouble? Surely it would have been wiser to have let this young person be taken to the hospital. I subscribe very largely to charities and hospitals, you know," she added, with a little laugh, as he rose to open the door for her, "and so I am of an opinion they should be used in cases like this. I don't suppose the girl will be in the least degree grateful to you —that sort of people never are. Good-night!"

And with that Miss Mostyn went slowly away, leaving Lord Otway with a new and, it must be confessed, unclerical sensation of anger burning in his breast, which lingered long after he had kissed his aunt and retired to his own room to smoke and muse over the events of the day.

CHAPTER VI.

Katharine's sprain was a very severe one. Dr. Stewart paid her a visit every day, and Miss Weston vied with Mrs. Smythe in nursing the girl and helping her to the best of her power. The two women had fraternised at once, and Mrs. Smythe had no words strong enough to express her gratitude for the generous and unusual manner in which Miss Weston had come forward to Katharine's assistance.

Of course she had made an attempt to have the invalid moved; she naturally shrank from trespassing on the hospitality of one who was, after all, a complete stranger to them, but Dr. Stewart was so peremptory in his refusal to permit this, and Caroline Weston was so hurt at the bare suggestion, that there was nothing to do but give in and submit to circumstances.

Katharine herself was so extremely ill the day following her accident that she could take no part in this discussion, and save for one protest that was silenced by a kiss from Miss Weston, she was content to lie in the dainty lavender-scented bedroom, with the sunshine glinting the pretty walls and white dimity hangings. She felt that while she was here she might draw breath easily, that she was free for the moment from the intolerable dread of detection, the horrible mental agony that had lived with her during the long, awful days since that scene at the old pit. She closed her eyes and lay as still as death, save when an occasional shudder

When a man thinks one woman is different from other women it argues that he does not know either the one or the others. —L. De V. Matthewman, in "Smart Set."

Benny's Hedge.

"Benny Bloobumper, how do we know that the moon is two hundred and forty thousand miles distant from the earth?" Benny (alarmed at the teacher's manner) replied: "Y-y-you said so yourself, sir."—"Tit-Bits."

Wet Moon and Dry Moon.

THERE are still some students of meteorology who believe that the moon may influence the weather, but the current popular beliefs on the subject are almost pure superstition. Witness the distinction between a "wet" and a "dry" moon, based on the position of the crescent, and still made by some presumably intelligent persons. The position of the crescent obviously depends on the relative positions of sun and moon, and is the same at the same season of the year. Mr. Arthur K. Bartlett has thought it worth while to devote a short magazine article to the detailed elucidation of all this. His explanation, which first appeared in the Battle Creek "Moon" (Battle Creek, Mich.), and is reprinted in "Popular Astronomy" (October), runs as follows:

"Owing to the changing position of the crescent seen upon the western sky after sunset, such expressions as these are frequently heard: 'If the moon lies so water can not run out, we shall have a drought;' 'A wet moon is one upon which the Indian can hang his powder-horn,' etc. Now, it is a fact not generally known that the crescent moon always appears 'upon its back' in spring, near the vernal equinox, and 'upon its end' in autumn, near the autumnal equinox, and these positions, which occur regularly each year, may be easily understood by a little consideration after the conditions have once been carefully explained.

"The change of direction in which the moon's 'horns' are turned is caused by the varying position of the moon, when at her 'new,' relatively to the sun and earth, and depends upon the difference in declination of the sun and moon. If the moon be further north than the sun soon after the 'new,' the sunlight strikes under her and she appears with her 'horns' upturned; but if she be further south the light reaches around her disk to the northward, and her 'horns' appear nearly vertical, as if the crescent moon was resting upon one of them. We see the moon in varying positions on the sky, and at first sight there appears to be no definite relation between her position and the position of her cusps or 'horns.' In fact, this feature of her aspect has seemed so changeful and capricious that it has even been regarded as a weather token. But in reality there is a simple relation always fulfilled by the moon's 'horns,' or points of the crescent. The line joining them is always at right angles or perpendicular to a line drawn from the sun to the moon, so that the 'horns' are always turned directly away from the sun. The exact position in which they will stand at any time is, therefore, easily predictable, and has nothing whatever to do with the weather. . . . As the late Professor Proctor well remarked, 'to assert that there will be such and such weather when the line joining the cusps is seen (for instance) nearly horizontal, the moon being new, is the same as asserting that there must be such and such weather at the time of new moon in February and March, if the moon is then nearly at her maximum distance from the ecliptic. And so with all such cases. If there were any value at all in such predictions, they would imply the strictly cyclic return of such and such weather.' The tradition that the crescent of the 'new' moon, when nearly horizontal, foretells a 'dry month,' or when nearly vertical a 'wet month,' is too absurd to be refuted, as it is without any foundation whatever. Like most other so-called 'signs,' those who accept them do so from coincidences observed. Cases which prove the 'signs' are noted, but those which do not are neglected, and we are convinced only because we wish to be convinced."

The Raw-Food Fad.

THE eaters of raw food are feebly encouraged by the editor of "Good Health," who remarks that whatever may be said of uncooked food, it is certainly preferable to food badly cooked. He says: "Just now the raw-food diet threatens to become a fad. Certainly many people are experimenting with this new dietetic idea. Fortunately it is not a very dangerous one. On the whole, much more mischief is done by bad cookery than could ever possibly result from the use of raw food, and there can be no doubt that it would be far better for the average man or woman to adopt an absolutely raw diet, and eat everything which he could possibly eat or relish, in a perfectly raw state than to swallow into his stomach the horrible messes which are concocted by the average cook. If the writer had to take his chances between raw food and the food found upon the average table, he would certainly dine with nature every time. Raw potatoes would be far less likely to do mischief in the alimentary canal than fried potatoes, Saratoga chips, or even ordinary baked potatoes well buttered while hot. Raw beefsteak, dripping and quivering, from the side of a freshly slaughtered animal, is probably one of the most digestible of all known foods, although certainly not the most esthetic or appetizing; while the same steak, dried and fried on the griddle along with burnt butter and salt, is only a little more digestible than a bit of sole-leather. Raw wheat would certainly digest after a lengthy peregrination, but the same wheat made into doughnuts, griddle-cakes, pie crust, or noodles, might tarry for a lengthy period in some nook along the digestive highway without undergoing that transmutation by which harmless food-stuffs are converted into live blood and vitalized tissues. It is safer on the whole for man to take his food as he finds it in its natural state than to take it as he finds it on the table of the average boarding-house or hotel. In other words, it is far safer for man to receive his food straight from the hands of his Maker, than from the hands of a French cook. The raw-food idea is not to be hastily condemned nor too much discouraged. It will open the eyes of a multitude of people to the evils of our present ways in diet, and certainly will serve a purpose in pointing toward the natural way in diet, from which the civilized portion of the race has wandered so far astray. Our natural-food friends only need to drop off a few coarse and comparatively innutritious as well as unpalatable food-stuffs to find themselves in the perfect way in diet which was marked out for man in the beginning, and in which our nearest relatives, the gorilla, chimpanzee and orang-outang, are still walking."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of The Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. Johns, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the disease have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

.Perfect Manhood.

Is rightly yours; but if you are not the man you should be, if you are losing your energy, your vital force, memory, annoyed by Varicocele, shrunken parts, and feeling if you don't care what happens, you are suffering from Lost Vitality; it creeps upon men unawares; do not deceive yourself or remain in ignorance while you are being dragged down by this disease; no matter what the cause may be, whether early abuse, excess or overwork and business cares, the results are the same; premature loss of strength and memory, emissions, impotency, Varicocele and shrunken parts. OUR LATEST METHOD TREATMENT WILL CURE YOU. We guarantee it as a positive cure for these conditions; it is the outcome of years of experience; it equalizes the circulation, stops all drains, thereby vitalizes the parts, restoring them to their normal condition and make the man of you as nature has intended. Do not be misled by so-called Specialists and Institutes. Read the following facts:

1. We do not accept an incurable case for treatment.
2. Each time you call you see Dr. Goldberg personally. He has 18 Diplomas, etc., which should be sufficient guarantee to his ability. All other chronic, private and Blood Poison Specialists either have some doctor in charge of their office or have an assistant to doctor you.

Don't Allow Operation for Cancer

There is a simpler, safer and more effective Method of Treatment.

Dr. J. C. Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U.S.A., in a paper he read before the Ohio State Medical Society, May 1896, said: "I have operated in a considerable number of cases of Cancer recently, and with one exception all have died within fourteen months after the operation."

This statement of a prominent Surgeon should make any one suffering from cancer, hesitate before submitting to operation and consider carefully the evidence offered on behalf of the new Constitutional remedy, which cures Cancers, Tumors and all malignant growths, without the necessity of operation. It is a simple vegetable medicine that searches out and destroys the cancer growths, completely eradicates the disease, and at the same time, builds up and invigorates the system.

Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., will be pleased to send full particulars of this treatment, in a plain, sealed wrapper.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

—The 57th band will go to Lindsay on Jan. 24, to give a concert.

—A large amount of hay and wood was offered for sale on the market yesterday.

—White owls are very plentiful in Victoria County. A large number have been shot this winter.

—Mr. Jas. Dawson will give a number of splendid solos at the lecture on Scientific Palmistry in the Sons of England Hall to-night.

—The society for the prevention of cruelty to animals ought to make an example of that teamster who left his team unblanketed with a cow tied to the wagon and two calves in the wagon box for several hours during the extreme weather of last Friday, while he went to a snug saloon near by and loaded up with hot booze. We haven't heard yet that the hard-hearted chap froze stiff on his ride home, but we have hopes.

—The Misses Hurley will preside at the piano to-night at Prof. O'Brien's lecture on Scientific Palmistry, in the Sons of England Hall. Dr. M. McClelland will take the chair at 8 o'clock.

Non-Coms Attention

The annual meeting of the non-commissioned officers of the 57th Regiment, will be held in the buglers room, at the drill hall, this evening at 8 o'clock sharp. All non-coms. are urgently requested to be present.

Mission Services

Hurt by Falling Tree

Mr. William Guthrie was brought in from Buckhorn on Monday night with a fractured leg. While engaged in cutting down a tree he was struck by the trunk as it fell with the result that his leg was broken.

He was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital, where the fracture was reduced by Dr. Moher.

Death of Mr. Jas. Garvin

The death occurred at the family residence, Midhurst on Saturday last of Mr. Jas. Garvin, formerly of town and brother of Mr. J. W. Garvin. The funeral took place yesterday from the late residence and proceeded to Midhurst cemetery for interment.

Mr. J. W. Garvin was called to the bedside of his dying brother last week.

Funeral of Mr. R. C. McHarrie

The funeral of Mr. R. C. McHarrie will take place to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock from the rooms on Water St. in the Bank of Commerce building and proceed to the Little Lake Cemetery for interment. Sergt. F. Miller Writes

Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Miller received a letter yesterday from their son, Sergt. Tom Miller, 1st Scots Guards, from Bloemfontein. The regiment has been doing garrison duty there for some time and find it rather monotonous. Tom says they expect to be in England for the coronation celebrations in June next. Sergt. Miller has been with his regiment every day—not having been sick at all.

A New Year's Greeting

The staff of the local branch of the Ontario Bank has issued a neat little card to the customers of that popular institution, wishing them a happy and prosperous New Year. The card is enclosed in a double envelope of khaki-colored paper, which has become a popular shade since the outbreak of the war in South Africa.

N.B.—Our junior reporter says that this is all bosh, and that the khaki is intended as a delicate reminder that the bank staff is the real stuff—all wool, and a full yard wide.

Large Shipment of Cattle.

Yesterday Messrs Hadwin and Davidson shipped from the C.P.R. station here, twenty-two cars of cattle. The stock was what is known as light stock, and was destined for British Columbia. The cattle were purchased in the neighborhood of Peterborough.

THE KIND THAT CURES

No Other Medicine Has Ever Had Such a Reputation in Canadian Homes.

Paine's Celery Compound is, today, the only medicine that can meet your needs with assured success, if you suffer from kidney disease, blood troubles, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervousness or dyspepsia. It cures the sick as surely as night follows day. It is the only medicine that gives immediate and effective results to the suffering.

The proprietors of Paines Celery Compound would utter a word of warning for the benefit of the public. The great popularity of Paine's Celery Compound has induced unscrupulous men to put up worthless imitations, calling them celery compounds. Care on the part of those purchasing for the sick is necessary. Ask for PAINE'S and insist upon getting it. See that the name PAINE'S is on each wrapper and bottle; no other is genuine.

A WATER FILTER

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—Now that it has been settled that the town shall control the water works system I would suggest that the Mayor and Council give favorable consideration to the subject of providing a proper filter to purify the water used for various domestic purposes. The filter might be put in early in the spring and therefore give us a better quality of water than we have yet received.

Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald. — Judgment (E. B. B.) in action tried at Peterborough to have a conveyance and mortgage declared null and void so far as same affects plaintiff's right to dower out of the land therein mentioned. The plaintiff is the widow of the late James W. Fitzgerald, deceased, to whom she was married in July, 1884. The defendant is a son of deceased by a former wife, and is his executor. The land in question is block "C" in the Town of Peterborough, according to registered-plan 12, and is subject to two mortgages made by deceased and his first wife, to bar her dower. In 1897 deceased conveyed the land to defendant for a nominal consideration of $11,000 subject to the mortgages, and reserving to the grantor a life estate without impeachment of waste, and defendant gave back mortgage for $7,000 without interest. It does not appear that a case is to be found which supports such an action as the present, "and this in spite of the fact that circumstances must frequently have arisen which would invite a decision of the question," per Lord Esher in Finlay v. Chirney in 1888, 20 Q.B.D., at p. 497. The case of re Luckhardt, 1897, 29 O. R. 111, though not exactly in point, seems against the plaintiff's status. The mortgage having been created before the death of the first wife, the legal estate never was in the husband during plaintiff's coverture. Action dismissed without costs. A. B. Aylesworth, K.C., and J. W. Bennet, Peterborough, for plaintiff, G. H. Watson, K.C., and R.B. Edwards, K.C., for defendant.

The Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

PATENTED 10TH MARCH, 1894.

For hard or soft coal, coke or peat. The only coal stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

THE STAR is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion——why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

THE STAR has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

THE STAR is 25 per cent. more economical than any other stove.

More than 5,000 are in use in the lower provinces.

PRICE LIST

No.	Height	Diameter.	Price.
0	24½ in.	9 in.	$11.20
1	30½ in.	9 in.	12.00
2	34 in.	10½ in.	15.00
3	37½ in.	12 in.	19.20
4	41 in.	15 in.	28.80

DIRECTIONS

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Local Consumers, Attention.

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room, the size of which is 45 by 33 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other. ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 "Star" stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The "Star" gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal. MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 STAR coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star and it requires a minimum of attention. TIMES PRINTING CO.

A FRIGHTFUL COLLISION IN A RAILWAY TUNNEL

While One Train is Standing, Another Crashes Into It in the Darkness

A LARGE CROWD ON BOARD THE WRECKED TRAIN

Fifteen Killed and Over Twenty Injured—The Tunnel Was Filled With Scalding Steam

New York, Jan. 8.—During the last two or three months there has been an epidemic of railroad wrecks throughout the country. Now this city has become the scene of a frightful accident. It is surprising that more collisions do not take place in the environs of New York than on the open road. Many a passenger has felt nervous in riding through the tunnels leading into New York from the east. Although few accidents have occurred in late years in these tunnels the exception has come at last in a frightful disaster.

A collision occurred this morning in the New York Central Railroad tunnel at 56th street, and Park avenue about a block and a half from the mouth of the tunnel, in which many persons were killed and injured.

The trains in collision were an accommodation on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Road from Norwalk, Conn., and a local known as the White Plains on the New York and Harlem branch of the New York Central. The latter train completely wrecked two cars of the Norwalk train. The Norwalk local consisted of five cars, and left Norwalk at 6.55 o'clock. It stopped on its way to the city at Rowayton, Darien, Glenbrook, Stamford, Sound Beach, Riverside, Cos Cob, Greenwich, Port Chester, and New Rochelle. It left the latter place, crowded with passengers, three minutes late. When the train was at 59th street, this city, it was stopped by a signal. The train had been standing but a few minutes when the collision occurred. The big engine of the White Plains local crashed into the passenger coaches, splitting the last car, and driving portions of it into the next car.

The steam from the engines scalded the persons in wrecked cars. The crash was heard by hundreds of the residents in the neighborhood and enormous crowds collected at the scene. Clouds of steam arose from the air-holes of the tunnel, making difficult the work of rescue. The injured were lifted out by ropes or were carried through the tunnel to its mouth just below 56th street.

All the bodies were badly disfigured, and nearly unrecognizable.

The number of injured was very large. Among those hurt were:—Albert D. Adams, a carriage builder, of this city, with a residence at New Rochelle, leg cut off below knee, seriously hurt; Albert Wadley, a florist, of this city, both legs fractured.

At 11 o'clock the railroad officials placed the number dead at fifteen among them being one woman. The number of injured are twenty or more.

ASSISTANCE SOON AT HAND.

The shock of the collision was plainly heard by people passing on Park avenue above the tunnel. Several of them ran to give the alarm. In ten minutes everybody at police and fire headquarters was at work to organize relief to be sent to the spot.

From fire headquarters a dozen blocks away a hook and ladder truck was rapidly despatched to the scene of the accident with several of the fire companies. The reserves from East 51st street and Grand Central Police Stations were turned out on the run. A hurry call was sent to Bellevue Flower, the Presbyterian and Roosevelt Hospitals, and in ten minutes a dozen ambulances were hurrying up with a corps of doctors.

TUNNEL FILLED WITH SMOKE AND STEAM.

When the rescuers reached the wreck smoke was pouring out of the entrance to the tunnel at 56th street and great columns of smoke reared out of the first ventilator a half block north. Ambulances came in from the east and west. Ladders were put down from the street and over the iron fence to the track, and the firemen, policemen, and surgeons were immediately at work.

It was very dark in the tunnel, which was filled with smoke and steam and the work of rescue was difficult. The locomotive of the White Plains local was hidden in the rear of the car of the South Norwalk train. The maimed and injured were calling from the wreck. Some, more badly injured, than others, were being assisted by the more fortunate passengers.

MORBID CURIOSITY OF CROWDS.

The work of rescue was further impeded by the enormous crowds which, in spite of police vigilance, swarmed into the tunnel through its many entrances or crowded about the openings at the surface.

The first of the injured taken from the wreck was a woman. She was carried to the Woman's Hospital. Here as well as at other points preparations were hurriedly made to take care of the wounded as rapidly as they were brought to the railroad station.

STORY OF A PASSENGER.

A passenger on the Harlem train said:

"Our train was held at the Harlem end of the tunnel for two minutes to allow the New Haven train to pass us. Then we proceeded. Suddenly there was a terrific crash and we were hurled from our seats. The shock was followed by the roar of escaping steam and the cries of the wounded.

"A score of men, passengers, got out of the windows and ran to the front of our train. The confusion and noise were awful. Our locomotive had ploughed half way through the last New Haven car. I saw several women taken out of the first wrecked car."

FATHER PHELAN REMEMBERED

After vespers at St. Mary's church, Monday evening, a large number of the young men of the parish waited on the Rev. Father Phelan at the parish Presbytery and presented him with a pair of beautiful fur gauntlets and a neatly worded address, which was read by Mr. Chas Podger, the presentation made by Mr. H. Mallon.

Rev. O. J. Phelan, St Mary's church, Lindsay:

Rev. and Dear Father,— Although the parishioners of St Mary's still continue to mourn the irreparable lost of their devoted pastor, the late Monsignor Laurent, your appointment as Parish Priest of Lindsay, even for a few, months, has been a source of great consolation to them in their bereavement.

His Lordship, the much beloved Bishop of Peterborough, evidently sympathised with the congregation of St. Mary's in their great sorrow; for on perceiving that you, reverend Father, had, during your curacy in Lindsey endeared yourself to pastor and people alike, he, in his wisdom, chose you as the priest best qualified to assuage the grief of the congregation and to administer the affairs of the parish in the usual way. For this kind consideration of the Bishop the people of St. Mary's are truly grateful, and pray that His Lordship may long be spared to guard and advance the interests of the Church in the Diocese of Peterborough.

We the undersigned, on behalf of the young men of the parish, have called on you this evening, dear Father, to assure you of our reverence and regard for you, to wish you the compliments of the season—a Happy New Year—and finally, to ask you to accept this pair of gauntlets in token of our esteem and affection, and as a memento of the closing months of 1901, so marked by the demise and obsequies of the good and faithful Monsignor Laurent.

Lindsay, January 1st. 1902.

Father Phelan made an eloquent and feeling reply in the course of which he referred to the regret he felt at his departure from the parish where he had so many devoted friends, but duty was paramount in the hearts of the priests of the Roman Catholic church, and that thought and the knowledge that he had their prayers would help him to bear the parting, made the more bitter because of the recollection of the most friendly feelings which existed between him and the late Mgr. Laurent. He assured them his thoughts would frequently be turned in the direction of St. Mary's Lindsay.—Lindsay Post.

BURLEIGH.

—The election of Reeve C. R. Booth and Councillors Wigg, Lean, Tucker and Dunford, insures for the municipality continued good government. The Council last year did splendid work. The Times extends its hearty congratulations to Reeve Booth and his associates, not forgetting the genial and popular clerk, Dr. Sall, who is a "specialist" in disease municipal.

—There appears to be little use in talking railway. The people are becoming despondent, and we fear a big exodus will take place unless relief is obtainable.

—We understand that our popular representative in the County Council, Mr. T. G. Eastland, will be the next Warden of the County. Mr. Eastland will be the right man in the right place.

—With wood $5.50 in Peterborough, it appears to us to be nothing short of a crime not to have a railway into this wooden country, which is so rich in everything required by the masses

A GIRL CHECKED THE TRAGEDY

Little Frost Stays Her Mother's Frantic Attack

IN FRONT OF A REVOLVER

Penitent Woman in Jail, and Now Thanks Daughter for Stepping Between Weapon and Husband

Chicago, Jan. 8.— Brave six-year-old Lillie Frost, at the risk of her life, interceded in a quarrel between her parents when she saw her father shot down by his wife in South Chicago last night.

"Please, mamma, oh please don't shoot again!" she cried as she leaped in front of the revolver which was aimed for a third shot at the prostrate man.

"No darling; I'll not shoot," she said.

At this moment neighbors rushed in and disarmed the woman, who had already repented her act. Her husband lay on the floor before her with a bullet wound in his right shoulder. The police were summoned. The woman with her brave little daughter were taken to the station, and the husband was removed to the hospital. While the wound is dangerous, physicians gave it as their opinion he would recover.

"I Pity The Poor Fellows Who Board in Homes and Hotels Where They Never Get

Malt Breakfast Food.

At the Morning Meal."

From a letter written by a prominent government official in Ontario to the manufacturers of Malt Breakfast Food, the following extract is taken:

"After two months use of Malt Breakfast Food in my family it has become a valued and permanent friend. There is nothing else in the form of a breakfast food that can ever take its place with us. Many of my friends are using it, and praise it highly as a health food. I pity the poor fellows who are obliged to board in homes and hotels where they never get Malt Breakfast Food at the morning meal. They miss one of the best things of life. The sooner they marry and secure homes of their own where they can command this best of health foods, the better it will be for their future health.

CAPE REBELS RECEIVE DEATH SENTENCES

But Lord Kitchener Deals More Mercifully with Rebels than Expected

LIKELY TO INCREASE THE ESTABLISHMENT.

Some Rules to Apply to the Men of the Mounted Rifles as to Former Contingent

Ottawa, Jan. 8.—Nothing has been heard in official reports here confirmatory of the cabled story that a Canadian squadron is to be contributed to the Imperial Light Horse serving in Africa. It is, however, believed that Lord Kitchener favors the idea, and that he will be heard from on the subject. If the War Office asks for it, there is no doubt the Canadian Government will offer the same facilities as were given in the case of the new regiment of Mounted Rifles.

The Patriotic Fund Executive met this morning to discuss the question of allowances to the men of the contingent now going to serve in South Africa. It was decided that the same rules shall apply to the men of this contingent as to those of the other contingents, except in the case of widows and children, for the reason that only unmarried men are supposed to be taken in the present case.

REBELS SENTENCED TO DEATH

Cape Town, Jan. 8.—The military court-martial at Fudishoode recently sentenced to death three out of seven rebels who were convicted before it. Three were sentenced to two years' penal servitude, with hard labor, and one to three years' penal servitude. Lord Kitchener commuted the death sentences to imprisonment for life.

TO INCREASE ESTABLISHMENT.

Durban, Jan. 8.—It has been decided to increase the establishment of the Imperial Light Horse by the addition of squadrons from Canada and Australia thus making the regiment truly Imperial.

HE HAS A KING'S I. O. U'S

Sam Parker, a Noted Hawaiian, in Peterborough Last Night

Relates Stories of Poker Games With the Late Kalakaua—Former Prime Minister Tells How Later He Escaped a Police Raid.

Mr. Sam Parker (no one ever calls him Samuel), the man who once played poker with a king, was in Peterborough yesterday. Parker was at the Snowden House, where he stopped awhile on his way to Ottawa.

More than 6 feet tall and described as one of the "handsomest men who ever came out of the west," although his complexion is almost the shade of coffee colored with rich cream. Parker always attracts much attention.

A native Kanaka, once a nobleman of Hawaii and prime minister to Queen Liliuokalani, but now an American citizen, Parker's life is pointed to as an illustration of the possibilities of new civilization.

SITS IN A HOUSE OF LORDS.

Parker's father was a member of the nobility and sat in the house of lords at Honolulu. His estate covered nearly one-half of the largest island of the group—Hawaii—and from his cattle ranch the markets of the capital city were supplied. The estates and title descended to Samuel, who, when he became of age, sat in the house of lords and was known as the wealthiest young man in the islands. This was before the days of Spreckels, with whom Parker later became allied.

Parker held an important office under King Kalakaua, and was the adviser of that monarch's stepsister, Queen Liliuokalani, even before he was made her prime minister. He told yesterday of the times when he used to "sit in" the poker games at Honolulu during Kalakaua's reign. The former prime minister has as souvenirs of those days several slips of paper bearing inscriptions like this: "I.O.U. $100—Kalakaua, Rex."

They are reminders of the monarch's numerous obligations, for it is said that when he died he was indebted to nearly every man, woman and child in the islands.

"King Kalakaua was an inveterate poker player," said Parker. "He would command his ministers to play with him and send invitations to officers of any foreign naval vessel that chanced to be in port. During the last two years of his reign Kalakaua had no money and it was then that his famous I. O. U's were issued. In a way they became a sort of paper money, stores accepting them at a considerable discount, believing the king would redeem his promissory notes some day. But he never did.

WINS HALF MILLOIN FROM KING.

"His majesty regarded it as an insult when anyone presented the bits of paper for payment. Those who played in the games, though, were supposed to put up cash against the promises to pay. One day I had a streak of luck and won a half a million dollars from Kalakaua. Every time he thought I was 'bluffing' he would raise me $10,000 or so, and the naval officers would drop out. When I got through I had all my pockets full of 'I O U's.' The king took the matter to heart, though, as much as if I had won real money from him, and I wasn't invitated to the royal palace for months afterward.

"After the new government came into power, laws against gambling, which had been dead letters, were rigidly enforced. Even private houses were subjected to police surveillance. A crowd of us kept on playing, nevertheless, meeting in one of the cottages of the Royal Hawaiian hotel or at one another's houses. Once a police detail surrounded a building in which a game was going on, and the affair broke up in much confusion. Among those who ran from the building down an alley was myself—Sam Parker, former prime minister — a fugitive from justice. I got away, too, and went to my estate in Hawaii for several months. There were great days out there."

Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the East Peterborough Agricultural Society will be held at the Town Hall, Norwood, on Wednesday, the 15th of January, 1902 at one o'clock, afternoon.

F. Birdsall, President.

Is What Will End the South African War

Kitchener's Plans are Sure to Bring Satisfactory Results—The Work Well Under Way.

London, Jan. 8.—Lord Kitchener's blockhouse system is proving far more successful in the South African campaign just now than it did for the Spaniards when fighting against the United States in Cuba.

It is not, however, all in a day that Lord Kitchener has been able to lay down his lines. First he paralleled the railways on either side and then the Orange river. Apparently finding these lines successful, he has been steadily extending the system until now, besides a number of lines in Cape Colony, the eastern half of the Free State is cut into three sections by the Bloemfontein-Thaba N'Chu and Kroonstad-Lindley lines. In the Transvaal lines completely encircle Johannesburg at a distance of about fifty to a hundred miles. These blockhouses have generally been placed at intervals, of a little less than a mile. These extensive lines are maintained at great expense and by the enforced idleness of tens of thousands of troopers. That fact that these lines have been so extending would prove that the commander finds them useful, yet their usefulness cannot be at all what the public have thought it. It will perhaps be effective as a preventive for spies getting in and out of the districts or to keep stragglers from going freely about the country, but such fortifications cannot prevent a commando from crossing their line. The Times' correspondent has been persistently advocating that the blockhouses be put at intervals of about a third of a mile, with wire entanglements between. Such a system would be extremely expensive over such long lines and necessarily curtail their extension. It would however, be very effective. At the present time a Boer commando can with little danger run between two blockhouses at night, when the effective range is less than fifty yards. Though the sentry would see them and give the alarm, they would be a mile away before the men from the blockhouses on either side could get to the spot should they deem it wise to attack a commando, which might be ten times their strength, in the open. Were the blockhouses put six or seven hundred yards apart, as suggested, and connected by wire entanglements, the line could then be pretty firmly held. The alternative method to this is the doing of such work as has been recently effected by Col. Wools-Sampson, Major Gough, and General Bruce Hamilton, by the use of effective mounted corps, who, covering long stretches at night, force the Boers to fight at a disadvantage. Dashing mounted infantry corps who know no surrender, but are always ready to fight life for life — who will ride light, and so be able to overtake the enemy even though they flee, is the more effective alternative, but it apparently holds out too great a possible loss of life. It is for this sort of use that the Canadian troops are being so effectively fitted by Col. Evans. Their rifle practice will make them exceptionally efficient. The revolver work can well be postponed till they get on board ship.

GOOD COLORS ARE ESSENTIALS TO SUCCESS IN THE MAKING OF MATS AND RUGS.

When you color yarns, rags, warps and other materials for the making up of homemade mats and rugs, the Diamond Dyes should be used at all times, as they produce the clearest and prettiest shades and colors that are absolutely fast. Good colors are prime essentials in making up mats and rugs. Do not be induced to buy imitation or worthless dyes from any dealer, simply because he may recommend them; his only interest in your package dyes is the large profit they give. THE COMPARISON OF BOER AND BRITISH LOSSES IN SOUTH AFRICA

Reduction of the Enemy Amounts to 18,320---British Loss Half That Number in Actual Fighting

London, Jan. 7.—A published review of operations in South Africa during the past year, based upon official reports, gives an interesting comparison of Boer and British losses.

The review says that the total reduction of the Boer forces, in killed wounded, taken prisoners and surrendered, amounts to 18,320 men. Out of this total, only 7998 rifles were secured. The captures of Boer ammunition amount to 2,300,000 cartridges.

British columns are supposed to have secured all the Boer artillery, amounting to 27 guns, exclusive of the two captured by Gen. DeWet at Zeefontein.

The captures of Boer stock have been enormous, considering the great hauls made during the earlier stages of the war. During the last year a total of 22,862 horses were captured, while of other stock, such as cattle, oxen, and sheep, 306,821 head were captured.

The British casualties from actual fighting, amount to only half of those sustained by the Boers, namely, 9113 men, of whom 1316 were taken prisoners, and have since been released. During the last year 4690 men died of disease. 15 officers and 342 men were killed accidently, and 25,300 were invalided home.

DOURO

—The Council will meet on Monday next, for the transaction of business. All the old officers of the township will be re-appointed. They are as follows: Wm. O'Brien, clerk; James Barry, treasurer; Robt. Allen, Assessor; Patrick Ryan, collector. A better lot of municipal officers it would be hard to get, from the Reeve down.

—Reeve Moloney is the man for Galway. He will make a fitting and capable representative in the County Council when the old system of Reeves for that body, comes back again.

—Councillor Allen who is ever on the alert for anything that will help the people, and improve their condition, accompanied Mr. Corbitt on his rounds purchasing cattle for the British Columbia market, and was instrumental in getting a lot of money distributed amongst the farmers of the township.

—Rev. Anvil McCann, the popular "village blacksmith," refused to sell his calves to Mr. Corbitt, on the ground that he had backed John L. Sullivan against the cattle buyer's [illegible], Jim Corbitt, and had lost. [illegible] McCann is still a firm supporter of [illegible] L.

SOUTH MONAGHAN

We take the following for the despatch, Alameda, Assa., which speaks for itself:

F. Deyell is in receipt of the following letter from Centreville, Ont., which will explain itself:

Mr. Fred Deyell, Alamede, N. W. T. OCanada,—Dear Friend—For the first time in many years you are absent from our S. S. entertainment and we learn with real regret that you are not likely any longer to be a permanent resident of our community.

During the years that you spent amongst us, we found you to be a willing and efficient helper in all that tended to the advancement of the best interests of our congregation, and we remember with especial gratitude and satisfaction the great assistance you so willingly rendered in connection with the musical department of our church work.

As a tangible mark of our esteem and gratitude, will you accept these furs, offered in the name of the Centreville congregation and accompanied by our earnest prayers for your success and happiness in the Great North West.

On behalf of the congregation,
GERALD A. BYERS.

SCIENTIFIC PALMISTRY

Interesting and Instructive Lecture by Prof O'Brien Last Night

The attendance at the lecture at the Sons of England Hall, to hear Prof. O'Brien, the noted palmist and phrenologist deliver a lecture on "Scientific Palmistry," was not as large as expected, and it is to be regretted that the public did not avail themselves of the occasion to hear the best known and most able authority on Palmistry and Phrenology that has ever lived in Canada.

Mr. Wm. Menzies occupied the chair in the place of Dr. McClelland, who was unable to be present on account of his professional duties, who appropriately introduced the speaker of the evening.

The lecture was logical and eloquent, and effectually answered the skeptics who pretend not to believe in the science.

The lecture was preceded and followed by a choice programme of vocal and instrumental music by the Misses Hurley, Mr. James Dawson, and by Madame Beavini O'Brien, the well known and accomplished prima donna.

It is hoped that the professor may be induced to repeat his lecture at an early date, as he handles his exceedingly interesting subject in a masterly way.

How to Get Up an Appetite.

Distaste for food often follows Grippe, and fevers, and is associated with a general weakness of the system. To impart a real zest for food, and give power to the stomach to digest and assimilate, no remedy can equal Ferrozone. This is a new and startling discovery. It strikes at the root of disease and by removing the cause, cures quickly and permanently. Ferrozone will quickly enable you to eat and digest anything. Ormond & Walsh, druggists, can tell you a great deal more about Ferrozone, how it cures and why it cures. Call today and see him.

VOTING MACHINE.

At the present legislative elections in New York State, in a great majority of the places the vote was recorded by a machine. It is reported that, in every case, the work was easily and promptly done. In Buffalo the vote of 1[illegible] of the 1[illegible] districts was known within [illegible] minutes after closing of the polls. In one district in New York the returns were made in exactly two minutes. The number of votes polled was [illegible] out of a registration of [illegible]. The first man took three seconds to record his vote. The average time for each vote was eighteen seconds. "Thus far," says the New York Evening Post, summing up the reports from the different counties, "no complaints have been heard from any quarter as to their smoothness and accuracy in operation, while the quickness with which the returns can be ascertained is simply amazing." One conclusive feature of the voting machine is its [illegible]. There is no questioning the result, and no recount is possible. In the New York election, where the machines were used, everything was settled in an hour. In Maryland, where the old ballot system prevailed, it required nearly three days to make the count, and thousands of defective ballots were thrown out, so that the real vote was never known. Voting by machine has everything to recommend it. The vote cannot be tampered with or burned, and the secrecy of the vote is ensured in a way that is not possible under the system that prevails in Canada, and especially in the provincial elections. This country ought to move a little faster in the adoption of the improved system for registering the people's will. The absolute secrecy of the machine should enable thousands of electors to vote according to the dictates of conscience, instead of through fear of detection by the agents of the government who are in control of the polling booths and of the ballot boxes and their contents.

W. T. STEAD'S UNPOPULARITY.

W. T. Stead's Review of Reviews has by order of the board of directors been excluded from the Ottawa Y.M.C.A., because of the pro-Boer utterances of the editor. The Monkey's Point of View.

A NATURALIST once came upon an Ourang-Outang while the latter was taking his siesta under a banyan tree in a forest. The Naturalist viewed him for a time in silence and then apostrophized him as he might had little Harold been present.

"Base brute, thou liest there with no thought beyond the gratification of thy instincts! And yet scientists tell us that man, the noblest work of God, has evolved from such as thee. Insensate animal! Thou hast never had the glorious privilege of eating of the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil."

"Pardon me!" said the Ourang-Outang, awakening suddenly from slumber, "I've had a few nibbles. Several years ago, a Scientist visited our wood, and he and I became quite chummy. He was always urging me to evolve and contended that it was quite an easy job. All I had to do, he said, was to strike fire with flint, make some stone implements and mud pottery, and haul off my neighbor's wife, thus establishing the sacred institution of the Family; but I have a strain of caution in my blood, and, as you see, I have rather a tidy berth here, so I demurred at the idea of exerting myself so tremendously for the doubtful good of obtaining something he called Progress."

"Well, the more I hung back, the more the Scientist urged and coaxed; so we finally decided that if he would pay all the expenses, I would take a trip around the world with him and study various phases of civilization, and then, if I thought the game worth the candle, I would evolve for him while he waited.

"I assure you, I never was so fagged in my life. He hauled me over land and sea and showed me pleasures and palaces, steam yachts and automobiles, libraries and pictures, wine, women and song—in a word, the kingdoms of earth.

"When I had seen them all, I said, 'Get thee behind me, Satan.' This splendid civilization is a masterpiece, but a masterpiece of fools. Half of the civilized toil that the other half may play various silly games that they call Society, Power and Fame.'"

"What did he reply to this?" asked the Naturalist.

"He had no time to make reply," answered the Ourang-Outang. "Knowing him as well as I did I was quite sure that he would convert the entire Bander-log people to his views and have all the monkeys in the country doing various stunts in their frantic efforts to evolve; so I simply cracked his head open with a cocoanut and disposed of the question without further argument."—Mrs. Wilson Woodrow in "Life."

The bronze statue of Washington and Lafayette, designed by Bartholdi being a replica of the statue in the Place des Etats Unis in Paris, stands at the junction of Morningside and Manhattan avenues at One Hundred and Fourteenth street, New York. It is the gift to the city of Charles Broadway Rouss, the blind merchant.

General Joubert was not a bitter enemy of England. When contesting the presidency with Mr. Kruger in 1888 he said: "I fought against the English for our liberty, but I have now, as I had then, no ill feeling whatever against any other power."

Paine's Celery Compound

The Great Medicine To Which Thousands Owe Life and Happiness

THE SURE BANISHER OF DISEASE AND GIVER OF GOOD HEALTH

Vigorous youth and robust manhood and womanhood are blessings that come to those whose nerves are strong, whose bodily organs are healthy and active, and whose blood is pure and rich with nourishment.

Paine's Celery Compound is the one medicine for the banishment of disease. It braces the nerves, makes pure blood and gives strength to every important organ of the body. It has given a new lease of life to thousands whose cases were considered critical. Its powers and virtues will, without fail, give you the new health and strength you so earnestly look for.

Mrs. A. Perry, Port Maitland, N.S., writes thus: "For two years my system was all run down, and I suffered more than I can describe from nervous prostration and insomnia. At times I almost lost my reason from severe pain at base of the brain. My husband advised me to try Paine's Celery Compound, which I did, and the effects were wonderful. I soon began to sleep well, and the pain left my head; my whole system was strengthened, and I now enjoy very good health."

Farewell to Housewifery

IS the housewife becoming extinct? Madame Henri Schmall declares that she is. She gives reasons for her belief, which is a hope as well as a belief. Madame Schmall is an Englishwoman, the wife of a Frenchman, and has devoted herself largely to the interest of "woman's rights" in France.

According to this independent lady the extinction of the housewife is greatly to be desired. Woman has progressed beyond the state of servitude to the home, and in the near future the wife "will have nothing whatever to do with her husband's dinner except to partake of it."

Of course husbands will continue to eat and to have dinners as formerly but Madame Schmall expects the cook and the kitchen to disappear from the household, and the dinner to be served by a "universal provider."

The idea is neither strictly original nor even novel, thinks the "Youth's Companion." It has been tried in several instances in this country, and has not been encouragingly successful. But perhaps the conditions were not favorable, and Madame Schmall may be justified in assuming that when she has the direction of the enterprise it will result in a perfection satisfactory to the most advanced woman.

Whether the world will be better or humanity the happier when madam the housewife, has disappeared, and whether the "universal provider" will fill the bill of "home cooking," are questions which must be answered by experiment and not by pure reasoning. There is every disposition to gratify the ladies, even the most progressive and most thoroughly emancipated ladies; but when home cooking and industries have been turned over to restaurant-keepers and servants jobbing by the hour, shall we still feel a thrill of emotion when we sing "There's no place like home?"

Jolly Jack Tar.

"Jolly" is the word generally associated with the jack tar. He is the picture of health, and the health bubbles over in mirth and merriment. When people are sick, especially when sickness attacks the lungs the doctor often advises a sea voyage. But in the large majority of cases the sea voyage is impossible.

It is to the men and women of the workaday world to whom sea voyages or change of climate are impossible, that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery comes as the greatest earthly boon. The effect of this medicine upon those whose lungs are "weak" is remarkable. Even where there is bronchitis, spitting of blood, emaciation, weakness, conditions which if unchecked or unskillfully treated lead to consumption, "Golden Medical Discovery" in ninety-eight cases out of a hundred works a perfect and permanent cure. It strengthens the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, so that the body in all its parts is not merely fed but nourished. And it is by nourishment that Nature builds up the body to resist or throw off disease.

"I had a terrible cough something over a year ago and could find nothing to stop it, or even to do me a particle of good," writes J. M. Farr, Esq., of Cameron, Screven Co., Ga. "I chanced to see an advertisement of yours, and forthwith bought a bottle of your invaluable 'Golden Medical Discovery.' Before I had taken half a bottle I was entirely well."

PUBLIC VACCINATION

A Large Number of People Vaccinated at the Council Chamber

At 10 a.m., Tuesday, the doctors began public vaccination at the Town buildings and were kept busy throughout the entire day.

Two nurses are in attendance and assist in getting the person ready. During the first hour no less than 25 persons presented themselves. The first one was the Town Solicitor, Mr. E. H. Edwards. A number of the town officers have already been vaccinated.

At closing time last night the total number vaccinated was 9[illegible]. All sizes and ages of children were there, both sexes being well represented. The doctors will be on duty at the Council Chamber today as follows:—

10 to 11—Drs. Pigeon and Young.
11 to 12—Drs. McGrath and Burnham.
2 to 3—Drs. Brown and Caldwell.
3 to 4—Drs. Brodie and Moher.
4 to 5—Drs. McPhail and Birnie.

In Charlotte Street Church

The prayer meeting in the Charlotte street church Tuesday night was well attended. The pastor presided, and after the singing of "Blest be the Tie that Binds," and prayer by Rev. Mr. Yuill, he read the scripture lesson appointed for the evening, from Proverbs, 11—25 and Luke, 13—43.

An anthem by the choir was followed by an inspiring address on "Our Nation," by Rev. Dr. Torrance. He spoke of the commanding obligations resting upon each one as individuals, communities and nations. A nation was a collection of individuals, but it was more; it was a great society, and we are privileged as members of the greatest nation the world has ever known. The decay of the national power of France was attributed to the demoralization of family life, the slighting of the marriage tie, and as a visitation for the slaughter perpetrated by Napoleon at the head of his great army. The address was followed appropriately by the singing of "Great Jehovah, God of Nations."

HAY FEVER
ASTHMA
EVERY [illegible] BRINGS RELIEF.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-size bottle."

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows, at 130th street, New York. I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the 1st of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, would pass through her, as her brain worked on and on over the same ghastly subject, and yet, when either of her nurses rose at that shiver and touched her hand, thinking she might be cold, they would find it burning with the strong heat of fever—a fever born not of the pain in her foot, but of her mind.

To Mrs. Smythe and Miss Weston, this quiet, almost lethargic condition was both natural and desirable.

But Dr. Stewart was not so satisfied; as a matter of fact he was puzzled, and so he told Lord Otway one day as he met the young man on the doorstep, making his usual inquiry for Katharine's health.

"There's more the matter than a sprain," he said, as he shook hands with Lord Otway. "Miss Brereton has the symptoms and appearance of one who has gone through some great mental strain; it is the mind that is keeping her back."

Lord Otway was silent, but the memory of Katharine's face as he had seen it first came before him. In fancy he could hear again her voice as she spoke in those short, constrained tones to Gordon Smythe at the railway station, and he knew that Dr. Stewart was right.

"It is such glorious weather," he remarked as he passed down the steps with the doctor, "it seems a thousand pities Miss Brereton cannot be out in it; but I suppose this is impossible?"

"By no means; the foot is decidedly better. Let me see; it is a fortnight since it happened, is it not? Yes—well, the sprain has progressed remarkably well; I see no reason why she should not be carried out into the air, or even taken for a drive. Of course, she must not attempt to walk or use her foot yet. Are you going up to Maple Tree House, Lord Otway? May I drive you there?"

Lady Blanche Hellairs was out in the garden, seated beneath her favorite tree, when Lord Otway descended from the doctor's carriage.

"Well, Ormande," she inquired, "and how is your invalid to-day?"

"Hum— the mind! How odd it is these mysterious people always suffer from mental complaints."

Lord Otway's frank, handsome face flushed.

"That is not like you, Aunt Blanche," he said gently, feeling hurt, he scarcely knew why, at the implied sneer at Katharine. "I am sure you would not say it if you were to meet Miss Brereton."

Lady Blanche was silent, but her face wore a disturbed look.

She was angry with her nephew—extremely angry. Here was a fortnight gone, and yet Ormande was no nearer that desirable matrimonial result than he had been before the fortnight was born.

Miss Mostyn was growing impatient and cross, that was perceptible to the meanest intelligence, but neither her impatience nor ill-temper seemed to attract Lord Otway's attention for a single moment.

"And with Thane in the condition that it is!" mused Lady Blanche, with growing irritation, "how on earth does Ormande imagine that he will keep things going when Thanecourt dies—as die he must some day. Barbara's income is just what is needed; she is a nice girl! Heavens above, what does a man want more?"

She was puzzled too at the change that had come upon Lord Otway; he was no longer brisk and full of chat and vigor, his manner was strangely preoccupied, and he spoke in a dreamy way, that betokened deep thought. Lady Blanche, woman of the world as she was, was not keen enough to jump at anything like the truth, and consequently she was puzzled.

Her brows met as she glanced at her nephew now, and noted how thoughtful and grave his face had grown.

"Ormande!" she said in her sharp, decisive way, "you have something on your mind, I am thinking. What is it? Are you being bothered by your vicar as usual?"

Lord Otway colored faintly.

"I shall have to leave you before long, Aunt Blanche," he said evasively.

Lady Blanche took the bait; to abuse Lord Otway's parish, vicar, work, daily life, etc., was an occupation that never palled on her.

"Why, you have not been here a month, Ormande—it is preposterous; I shall write and tell Dr. Bray so myself."

Lord Otway smiled at this.

"It will be waste of time, dear, for [illegible] go; I have had quite enough [illegible] to last me for a year."

Lady Blanche knitted on in silence; she was wondering how best she could broach the subject of marriage and Miss Mostyn, when that young lady appeared on the scene herself, a picture of rural simplicity, in a gown [illegible] out nothing under [illegible]

[illegible] Blanche glanced at her [illegible] Barbara Mostyn was [illegible] she should be; high born, pretty, wealthy; that her heart was something akin to a stone did not trouble Lady Blanche, because she did not know this fact; to her, Barbara always seemed sweet-tempered and sweet-natured, an ideal wife for Lord Otway. Bearing this in mind, Lady Blanche suddenly remembered an important letter she had forgotten to post, and, gathering up her work, moved away with her stately walk.

Lord Otway gave a little sigh as she went; he infinitely preferred to sit and dream over that pale, lovely face, those marvellous eyes of Katharine Brereton, than to gaze at the pretty, empty, flesh-and-blood one of Barbara Mostyn; but duty demanded him to exert himself and amuse his aunt's guest, so he sacrificed his inclinations on the altar of courtesy and conventionality.

Lady Blanche seated at her table, pen in hand, to write a letter that never would be dispatched, watched the young couple eagerly from the [illegible], her hope growing more assured—till she saw Barbara rise slowly and come towards the house in the same dispirited fashion as she had crossed the lawn before.

"Upon my word, Ormande is enough to try a saint!" ejaculated Lady Blanche to herself; then, as she threw down her pen, she pursed up her lips. [illegible] I must take matters in hand, [illegible] he is so blind to the interests of [illegible] Thanecourt future—well [illegible] his eyes opened. What [illegible] come to the best I can [illegible] out. Well, that [illegible] [illegible], for I have made up my mind to do my duty by my family, and so Ormande shall propose to Barbara Mostyn before another week is gone!"

* * *

The twenty-fifth of July was a splendid day. The people of Northminster were not in the least degree surprised.

"Lady Blanche always has fine weather!" they said with decision.

For there was a grand garden party fixed to take place at Maple Tree House on this particular date, and, consequently, as a matter of course, the sun shone gloriously, as it always did—according to Northminster gossip—when Lady Blanche Hellairs entertained her friends.

It was a very grand day, too, at the lawn, as Miss Weston's pretty quaint little residence was called, so named from the fact that at the back of the house there stretched a long wide lawn as soft as velvet and as green as grass should be.

Katharine was not only going out into the garden for the first time, but she was going to try and walk a few steps with the aid of a stout stick. She had been carried out two or three times before, and placed comfortably on the soft cushions of Miss Weston's old-fashioned barouche, had been driven through Northminster and shown all the points of interest outside the town, which latter of course she knew moderately well from having visited it now and then on shopping expeditions for Mrs. Smythe or herself. But though she had driven, Katharine had been strongly forbidden by Dr. Stewart to put her foot to the ground until this fiercely hot afternoon when, having got the desired permission, she was going to take a short walk all by herself. Mrs. Smythe had flown over for a brief moment to her own home, in an agony lest Gordon should have made one of his sudden and unexpected appearances in Ledstone, a not unlikely thing his mother opined, since she had not heard from him for nearly a week. Miss Weston was due at Maple Tree House, for she was decidedly inside the magic circle of Lady Blanche's acquaintances, and so—left alone in Dorcas' care, to whom a multitude of rigorous orders had been given—Katharine was going to make her first effort to regain the use of her foot.

Miss Weston had accompanied her to the edge of the lawn, but as the clock was striking three, and punctuality was one of her many virtues, she betook herself to her carriage to go to Maple Tree House.

"My dear," she urged as she turned away, "you will be careful now, won't you?"

Katharine smiled faintly as she gave the desired promise.

"I don't half like leaving you," continued the kind-hearted little lady. "But you say you would rather try alone first, dear child."

"Much—much rather. Now, please, do not let me keep you. Here comes Dorcas to tell you five minutes have gone."

"Five! Dear me! I must rush. You will be most careful, and ——" and with a final word of warning and anxiety, Caroline Weston disappeared.

"Good, generous soul!" Katharine said to herself, and tears sprang unbidden to her eyes.

She sighed as she gazed at the beauty, the peace of this old-fashioned garden.

"How I should have loved it in those days, before this horror came upon me," was the thought that ran in her mind; then a swift look of resolution, eagerness and dread crossed her face; "but I must get better quickly; yes, quickly, and then I can leave this all, and go to another country. I shall breathe freer with an ocean between me and—and Gordon Smythe! Life here, with this ghastly, this horrible secret weighing me down, would be torture! It would drive me mad." She put her hand to her eyes with a gesture of pain; then, as if to silence the working of her mind, she began to move very feebly, very slowly, rather nervously down the lawn.

"I—I hope I shan't faint," was the agonized thought; and, even as she thought this, her limbs trembled as if they refused to support her. The stick shook unsteadily, and she would have sunk feebly to the ground had not a strong arm been suddenly passed around her form, and a sense of protection and help came to her. It was at first a very vague feeling, for Katharine had seen nothing but a blurred, black mass beside her, heard nothing but the singing in her ears. But when a few moments had passed, and the faintness was gone, she opened her eyes, and they met, once more, those two anxious, tenderly-concerned blue eyes that had mixed so strangely in her confused thoughts of late.

"Are you better—really better?" inquired Lord Otway, eagerly. "Can you stand for one moment, only one moment, while I bring you a chair. See, here is my stick; lean well on both of them. That is right. Only a moment!"

It was scarcely a second before he was back with a large garden chair, into which with quiet strength he put her as gently as any woman might have done.

Katharine's courage revived, and she felt the feebleness leaving her.

"It was an old story," she said with a wan smile; "I thought I could do so much all at once."

"I should like to scold you, but that is out of the question, since I don't know you well enough." Lord Otway was gazing anxiously at her white face. "Let me get you something, Miss Brereton; you have overtaxed your strength. I—I am so glad I happened to come just then."

"So am I, most heartily."

Katharine shivered. She passed her hand over her eyes, but shook her head when he again suggested some stimulant.

"I want nothing but to thank you for your great kindness, Lord Otway," she answered. "I have heard of your daily visits to make inquiries after me; believe me, I am deeply grateful. You could not have done more if I were an old and valued friend, instead of a complete stranger."

Lord Otway began to speak, but he bit his lips and checked himself.

"I must apologize for appearing so suddenly now, but I met Miss Weston on her way to my aunt's garden party, and she gave me permission to come in."

A tiny touch of color stole to Katharine's face.

"I am much pleased to see you, Lord Otway. I have been looking forward to this meeting, when I could try and thank you for all your goodness to me; but—forgive me for saying it—but will not your aunt wonder what has become of you?"

Lord Otway pulled up another chair close to Katharine's and sat down in it.

"Aunt Blanche knows the reason of my absence, Miss Brereton; in fact, it was as much on her account as my own that I came into Northminster just now. I shall get back to Maple Tree House long before the party is over."

He was silent after this, and Katharine, glancing at him, saw that there was a cloud on his sunny face, and a contraction as of pain around his mouth. It almost vexed her to see it there. Why, she could not have told.

"I see you have guessed the truth. I am very much troubled, Miss Brereton," he said frankly.

Katharine tried to push herself up but had to lean back again on the soft cushions.

"May I not help you, Lord Otway?" she said, timidly but eagerly. "Please call on me if I can be of any use."

The young man looked at her tenderly, but with deep respect tempering the tenderness.

"There is nothing you can do, Miss Brereton. It is—but I must not depress you with sadness in this our second meeting. I don't think I should have said what I have only, somehow, I don't feel as if we were utter strangers."

Katharine's heart beat a little hurriedly.

"We may be good friends in the future; who knows?" she replied.

Lord Otway's face flushed.

"It—it will be a great happiness to me, this friendship with you."

He put a slight emphasis on the last word. Katharine was silent for a moment, then, with the delicate rose pink lingering on her cheeks, she said:—

"But your trouble, Lord Otway—will you not let me help you? Remember, I took your help."

He smiled for an instant, then paused, and then, with a deep sigh, his face grown pained and sad, he replied:—

"I have heard of the death of a dear friend, Miss Brereton," he said. "A bright, noble boy! We were almost brothers together, and I cannot—cannot realize that he is gone forever."

His voice was broken, and Katharine knew that tears were in his eyes. She longed to stretch out her hand in comfort, but she restrained herself, and long afterward she thanked Heaven she had done so.

"I am deeply, truly sorry for you," she faltered.

"Thank you," said Lord Otway. "Thank you, Miss Brereton. Strangers though we are, I feel, I know, I have your sympathy. Ah! if you had only seen my poor cousin—if you had met and known him you would realize how great his loss is to me. There were few better or nobler men in the world than poor Craven Adair, my——"

He stopped suddenly, for Katharine had sprung from her chair, had uttered a broken cry, then a low moan of pain, and when, in great fear and anxiety, Lord Otway bent over her as she fell back nerveless on the cushions again, he saw that she had fainted.

CHAPTER VII.

A great fear seized Lord Otway as he bent over the girl's mute, pallid face. Was she dead, too? Was the joy, the strange happiness waked at sight of Katharine, and never realised so fully until this moment—was this all to go, to vanish out of his life, before he had thoroughly grasped it? Surely, surely, Heaven would not be so cruel! In his anguish the young man bent lower and lower, till unconsciously his lips touched that pale, noble brow. At the touch he started, and the blood rushed wildly through his veins. Lifting himself suddenly, he strode across the lawn, and, looking in at a window that opened into the garden, called for some one to come at once.

Dorcas answered the summons, and, uttering a sharp exclamation, she turned back for one moment, then reappeared with a gigantic bottle of smelling salts, the very same, in fact that had been proffered Katharine at her accident, and some brandy.

"You hold these to her nose, sir, while I run and fetch more brandy, she's coming round, I think."

And even as Dorcas [illegible] turned and went back swiftly to the house, those heavily fringed lids were lifted, and the eyes looked out beneath them, like stars of beauty.

"Are you better—really better?" asked Ormande, eagerly. "I am afraid you must have tried your foot too much, Miss Brereton."

Katharine made no answer; she was staring at him—staring with such a world of agony, of helpless fear in those deep, gray orbs, that Lord Otway winced as though some one had struck him a blow. If he had been inclined to doubt Dr. Stewart's opinion before, he must have been converted now. Her mind was her ailment, indeed.

And yet, incomprehensible as it may seem, the young man did not for an instant associate this fainting fit with the subject of the conversation that had begun just before it occurred.

He said nothing—there was nothing he could say after reading that glance—but he felt a stronger wave of sympathy and tenderness pass over him in connection with this girl.

As Dorcas came toward them carrying a tray with a glass, water bottle, and brandy decanter on it, the young man went forward to relieve her of this, with as much deference as though she had been a duchess, not a servant.

Katharine saw him go, and she breathed a short, gasping sigh; she was hideously wide awake again; his words were ringing in her ears—she longed wildly for him to go, to be alone, while at the same time a strong contradictory determination crept on her to subdue her weakness, her agitation, and to know the rest. Yes, she must know more. Perhaps at this moment the mangled body of that murdered boy lay exposed to sight, while the myrmidons of the law were in search of Gordon Smythe, the coward who had taken his life—the cruel coward, her husband. Perhaps even now the summons would come for her to attend and protect that husband from a shameful end—who could tell? Her brain reeled, but she conquered the dizziness. Before Lord Otway departed she must know all he had to tell about his cousin, Craven Adair. The resolution born in that one moment was firm as iron.

"I am better now—quite better," she said, framing her pale lips into the semblance of a smile. "Don't look so frightened, Dorcas; there is nothing wrong."

"I am glad the mistress didn't see you swoon, for she'd have been greatly alarmed. Now you must drink some brandy—only a little, but it will do you good."

He Said "No."

THE great Young Men's Christian Association Convention recently held in Boston brought delegates from all parts of the world to testify to the value of the Christian religion as the highest rule of conduct for a practical life. It was natural, as the delegates met each other, for them to exchange vital experiences. The following was told by one who had traveled eight thousand miles to attend the meetings:

"My father was a rancher on a small scale in Australia. He had only a thousand sheep or so and a couple of square miles of run for pasture. He was an English emigrant of sturdy yeoman stock, and while the free life of a shepherd had taught him tolerance and kindness, he remained true in principle to the strict lessons of his early years.

"The nearest neighbor or station was ten miles away, but the ranchmen used to think nothing of riding twenty or forty miles to a centrally located farm on Saturdays to spend the night in carousal, and ride back on Sunday.

"The isolation was so depressing and the heat so exhausting that when the men came together once a week in this way, drinking and gambling seemed inevitable. In the kindled passion and excitement of these coarse pleasures they thought they might forget for a few hours the suffering and privation of their lot.

"At last it was my father's turn to entertain. He must invite the herders of the kraals and ranches within a radius of nearly fifty miles.

"'Boys,' he said to his two sons, my brother and myself, 'it's the parting of the ways. We either live as we have lived, simply, in the fear of God, minding our business, paying our debts if we can, saving our money if possible, and being cut by every man round here, or we fall into the ways of our neighbors, and drink and gamble ourselves into perdition. I am not going to break your mother's heart, and I say "No," even if they burn us down.'

"It was the critical moment of our lives. I could have fallen at my father's feet and worshipped him when he made that decision. He looked like a god—determined and invincible.

"So it came about that my brother and I divided the circuit between us, and I rode to the north and he to the south. To every ranchman this message went: 'Father invites you for Saturday and Sunday as usual. There will be no cards or liquor—only a quiet talk about old England and the welfare of the colony.'

"We waited that Saturday afternoon with trembling, not expecting a single guest. But suddenly one rode up, and then another, and another, until the whole section was represented. There never had been so large a gathering. They came in curiosity and with respect.

"With mother opposite him, father said grace at table, and we boys saw tears flow down rugged cheeks. That night the men talked long about bushmen and rabbits and fences and drought, and how to stand by each other.

"The next morning, as he did every Sunday morning, father conducted prayers, this time before fifty of the roughest men I had ever seen assembled; and there was singing of hymns, broken here and there by sobs and tears. When they parted, my father, although a recent comer, was the acknowledged leader of the community.

"That section became the most prosperous section in all the country round. And I thought if Christian courage could accomplish that, it was good enough for me to live and die by. My father's 'No' was the one thing needed to save the community, and it saved it."

A Roosevelt Story.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, the new President of the United States, was not always the mighty hunter he is now. He has had his day of being afraid of big game. But that was many years ago, when he was a wee little boy in short trousers and used to play tag in Madison Square in New York.

Opposite the square on the east side stood a Presbyterian church, and the sexton, while airing the building one Saturday, noticed a small boy peering curiously in at the half-open door, but making no move to enter.

"Come in, my little man, if you wish to," said the sexton.

"No, thank you," said the boy. "I know what you've got in there."

"I haven't anything that little boys mayn't see. Come in."

"I'd rather not." And the juvenile Theodore cast a sweeping and somewhat apprehensive glance around the pews and galleries and bounded off to play again.

Still the lad kept returning once in a while and peeping in. When he went home that day he told his mother of the sexton's invitation and his unwillingness to accept it.

"But why didn't you go in, my dear?" she asked. "It is the house of God, but there is no harm in entering it quietly and looking about."

With some shyness the little fellow confessed that he was afraid to go in because the zeal might jump out at him from under a pew or somewhere.

"The zeal? What is the zeal?" the mother enquired.

"Why," explained Theodore, "I suppose it is some big animal like a dragon or an alligator. I went there to church last Sunday with Uncle R——, and I heard the minister read from the Bible about the zeal, and it frightened me."

Down came the Concordance from the library shelf, and one after another of the texts containing the word "zeal" was read to the child, whose eyes suddenly grew big and his voice excited, as he exclaimed:

"That's it—the last you read!"

It was Psalm lxix., 9: "For the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up."

If two spoons are accidentally put into a cup it denotes a wedding.

Don't Allow Operation for Cancer

There is a simpler, safer and more effective Method of Treatment.

Dr. J. C. Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U.S.A., in a paper he read before the Ohio State Medical Society, May 1895, said: "I have operated in a considerable number of cases of Cancer recently, and with one exception all have died within fourteen months after the operation."

This statement of a prominent Surgeon, should make any one suffering from cancer, hesitate before submitting to operation and consider carefully the evidence offered on behalf of the new Constitutional remedy, which cures Cancers, Tumors and all malignant growths, without the necessity of operation. It is a simple vegetable medicine that searches out and destroys the cancer growths, completely eradicates the disease, and at the same time, builds up and invigorates the system.

Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., will be pleased to send full particulars of this treatment, in a plain, sealed wrapper.

OBITUARY

Death of Miss Irene La Plante, Daughter of Mr. Thos. La Plante, Town

The death is announced of Miss Irene LaPlante, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thos LaPlante which occurred yesterday morning after a lingering illness of several months. The deceased young lady was 20 years of age and was general favorite in her large circle of friends.

Mr. and Mrs. LaPlante will have the sympathy of the entire community in their trouble, this being the third death in the family during the past eighteen months.

The funeral will take place from the family residence, No. 280 Rubidge street, to-morrow morning at nine o'clock and proceed to the St. Peter's Cathedral, thence to the Roman Catholic Cemetry for interment.

DEATH OF REDMOND HENRY

The Sad News Was Received in Town Yesterday—Died in New York

Mr. Myles Henry received the sad intelligence yesterday morning of the death of his brother, Redmond, which occurred at Bellevue hospital, New York, on Monday.

The friends of Mr. Henry will receive the news with sincere regret. He has been in New York since last summer, finding employment there shortly after his return from the Philippines, where he served with the United States forces. Deceased was about 30 years of age and unmarried.

CATHEDRAL WEDDING

Mr. Leon La Fontein, of Toronto, Married to Miss Valarie E. Breault of Town

A very pretty wedding took place at St. Peter's Cathedral yesterday morning at 9 o'clock, when Miss Valarie Eugenie Breault was married to Mr. Leon LaFontein, of Toronto. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father O'Brien. The bride was married in her travelling dress of fawn broadcloth, trimmed with cream applique. She was attended by her niece, Miss Louise LaPlante, who was attired in castor, trimmed with applique, while Mr. Alexander Miron, of Belleville, was the best man.

After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was partaken of at the home of the bride's brother-in-law,—the Montreal House.

The bride and groom were the recipients of many beautiful and costly presents and have the best wishes of their many friends.

The happy couple left on the C.P.R. noon train for the east and will visit Montreal and Quebec. On their return they will reside in Toronto.

WEDDING BELLS

Mr. Reginald Farthing Weds Miss Elsie May Winters, of Ennismore

The residence of Mrs. Farnum, No. 20 College street, was the scene of a very interesting event at noon on Tuesday, it being the occasion of the marriage of Mr. Reginald Farthing, of Harvey, to Miss Elsie May Winters, of Ennismore. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss E. A. Winters, and Mr. George Warner acted as best man.

The ceremony was performed by Elder Washington Morse, of town.

The friends of the newly married couple will extend their best wishes for a long and happy married life.

THIN AND THICK

Good Food Will do Wonders.

A test was made to see how much a thin person could gain by using Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food. A lady in Warren, O., says, "Some months ago I was so thin and poorly nourished I thought I would see what effect Grape-Nuts would have on me, so I began taking the food regularly for breakfast and began to greatly improve at once.

I kept track of my weight and found I gained nearly ten pounds in about six weeks, and I have never felt better in my life. Have no more sour stomach, and you may depend I think the food a great success.

My son noticed he could memorize more readily since he began using Grape-Nuts. Please don't publish my name." (Name can be given by Postum Co., Battle Creek Mich.)

The system will build out the body to its natural size and weight if the stomach can digest food properly. So when Grape-Nuts food is taken, being pre-digested, it quickly goes into the blood and makes, not only tissue and muscle, but particularly nourishes and builds the brain and nerve centers. This comes from the delicate particles of phosphate of potash which is from certain parts of the field grains and incorporated in the food. [illegible] prove the truth of the statement.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of The Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. Johns, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Discouraged Stomachs—Could you wonder at the delicate organs of digestion refusing to be helped and comforted when day after day they are literally "drowned out" by strong tonics, bitters and harmful nostrums. Common sense came into Medical Science when it evolved the tasty tablet dose and discovered a God-send to humanity in Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple tablets. 35 cents—[illegible] Sold by [illegible]

The Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

PATENTED 10TH MARCH, 1894.

For hard or soft coal, coke or peat. The only coal stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

THE STAR is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion———why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

THE STAR has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica,

After being filled the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

THE STAR is 25 per cent. more economical than any other stove.

More than 5,000 are in use in the lower provinces.

PRICE LIST

No.	Height	Diameter.	Price.
0	24½ in.	9 in.	$11.80
1	30½ in.	9 in.	12.00
2	34 in.	10½ in.	15.00
3	37½ in.	12 in.	19.20
4	41 in.	15 in.	28.80

DIRECTIONS

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Local Consumers, Attention.

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room, the size of which is 45 by 33 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other. ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 "Star" stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The "Star" gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal. MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 STAR coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star and it requires a minimum of attention. TIMES PRINTING CO.

Detroit, Mich., June 24, 1899.

My Dear Sir:—Yours of the 14th inst to hand, and because of business, you will pardon my delay in making reply. I am pleased to note the wonderful success of the Canada Business College, and as my mind goes back to some 18 years ago, and I was then permitted to be one of your students, I wish to assure you with a grateful heart, that I have never regretted the many pleasant and happy days I spent in your school. I say, pleasant, because I always found you courteous and kind to all, and happy, because I first learned from you the true principles of a business career and which I was called upon to adopt.

Wishing you every success, I am Sir,

Yours Truly,

A. A. WILSON.

A NEW DEPARTURE FOR CATHOLIC CHURCH

The Pope and the Bible is a Popular Thing Just Now

His Holiness Makes a New Departure in Appointing a Pontifical Enquiry

AN IMPORTANT AND MARVELOUS INNOVATION

Will the Result Tend to Modify the Position of the Church

London, Jan. 10.—The announcement that the Pope has appointed a special Pontificial commission "to consider all questions connected with Biblical studies" is of great significance at this time of complete revolution in the Protestant world, so far as concerns its attitude toward the Bible, the sole source from which Protestantism derives its religious authority.

This Vatican commission is to afford "Catholic scholars all over the world the fullest opportunity of stating their views and difficulties and bringing them to the direct notice of the Holy See." The Pope having already championed the absolute verity and supernatural inspiration of the Bible as the Word of God, such difficulties submitted will be explained away, of course, in harmony with that positive and uncompromising Catholic decision. That is, the purpose of the commission is not to stimulate criticism of the Bible after the fashion now so general in Protestantism, but to silence it and oppose to it the final Pontificial judgment. The appointment of the commission, however, seems to suggest that this new criticism has brought "difficulties" to Catholic scholars, as it has also to the great body of Protestant scholars, if not to them universally, and that the Pope feels impelled to remove the stumbling blocks.

Undoubtedly, if Christian theology is to stand at all, belief in the Bible as supernatural inspiration must continue. Even for Catholics belief in the miraculous authority of the canonical Scriptures is essential, for if it is destroyed the authority of tradition also will be involved in the destruction. The assault is on all miracles, all supernaturalism. The present critical method applies to the miracles a scientific test, or a purely natural test, which, necessarily, discards the supernatural as scientifically undemonstrable.

The resolution of doubts of supernatural Biblical authority, however, is essential for Protestantism rather than Catholicism. The position of the Church of Rome on that subject is determined already and is irreversible; but in Protestantism, though it has no other foundation than belief in the Bible as absolute and Divine truth, as "the Holy Spirit speaking in the Scripture," to use the words of the Westminster Confession, there has been of recent years a very complete rejection of that belief. A school of criticism has arisen which practically reduces the Bible to a human authorship no more inspired than were Shakespeare, Dante and Goethe, and its seat is in the foremost theological seminaries. That is, it is inside of the Church, and thus wields the profoundest influence in undermining Christian faith.

At this time a Presbyterian commission is engaged in an attempt to revise the Westminster Confession in response to a demand which had its origin in the scepticism induced by the scholarly criticism of the Bible called the "higher." Of course, the effort will be vain, for the General Assembly in appointing the commission timidly avoided the essence of the question in controversy, or the authority of the Bible, whether it is Divine or human. But that pivotal question will yet have to be met by Protestantism as squarely as if it has been met by the Pope. Mere verbal changes in creeds built wholly on the theory of the inspired and inerrant authority of the Bible, are child's play at a time when religious thought has been revolutionized by destructive criticism of the validty of that authority by Protestant theologians and scholars of world wide repute, men whose teachings are not repudiated and anathematized by their Churches, but who are suffered to remain in the ministry without reproach.

It is not the Pope, then, but the great Churches of Protestantism, which need to appoint a commission, or commissions, "for the consideration of all questions connected with Biblical studies." The time is coming, if, indeed, it has not come already, when these Churches must take their stand definitely and decidedly on the question whether the Bible is of God or only of man. As it is now, the Pope is the sole bold, positive and uncompromising champion of the Bible as the Word of God.

Twenty Recruits Discharged.

Halifax, Jan. 9.—A foot of snow at the mouuted Rifles' concentration camp to-day made a strong contrast in the conditions prevailing there when compared with the hard frozen bare ground of the past few days. In the midst of the storm this afternoon the Rifles went out in force to the common for the regular manoeuvres, but the deep snow prevented the afternoon drill, except on a very small scale. The men are being fitted out with their new uniforms, which are warm and servicable, while the dark drab color is more pleasing in appearance than the khaki of old. Since the concentration began, twenty-six recruits have been discharged for various reasons, chiefly for misconduct. Col. Evans to-day telegraphed for thirty additional men from the West. A number have been taken on here.

WHAT'S THE USE

Sticking to any Habit When it Means Death

Old King Coffee knocks subjects out tolerable flat at times, and there is no possible doubt of what did it. A lady gives her experience. "I used to have liver trouble nearly all of the time and was compelled to take some liver medicine like calomel which relieved me only for a little while. Then every once in a while I would be suddenly doubled up with an awful agony in my stomach. It seemed as though every time I took a breath I would die. No one could suffer any more and live.

Finally I got down so sick with catarrh of the stomach that I could not turn over in bed, and my stomach did not digest even milk. The doctor finally told me that if I did not give up drinking coffee I would surely die, but I felt I could not give it up.

However, Husband brought home a package of Postum Food Coffee and it was made strictly according to directions. It was the only thing that would stay on my stomach, and I soon got so I liked it very much.

Gradually I began to get better, and week by week gained in strength and health. Now I am in perfect condition, and I am convinced that the whole cause of my trouble was from coffee drinking, and my getting better was due to leaving off coffee and taking Postum.

A short time ago I tasted some coffee and found to my astonishment, that I did not care anything about it. I never have to take liver medicine any more. I hope you will use this letter for the benefit of those suffering from the poisonous effects of coffee. I would gladly send to those who wish, the address of my attending physician who will corroborate what I say." Mrs. Abner Marvine, [illegible]

PUBLIC VACCINATION

Many are Taking Advantage of the Opportunity—A Busy Day Yesterday

Public vaccination continues at the Town Council Chamber. The doctors in attendance yesterday were kept busy during the day and will most likely be busy to-day. This is the last day of public vaccination, and those not already treated will make a rush today. A great many are too modest to go to the Council Chamber and are being vaccinated privately by the doctors.

10 a.m. to 11 a.m.—Dr. Pigeon and Dr. Young.

11 a.m. to 12 noon.—Dr. McGrath and Dr. Burnham.

3 p.m. to 4 p.m.—Dr. Moher and Dr. Bradd.

The small-pox patient at Jackson Park is a very sick man but there is no doubts at all about his recovery, but it will be some time before he will be out.

35-60 The Critical Age

Height of vigor past—nature's power slowing down, vitality less, recuperative power less, endurance less. Stop the progress of decay, tone up the weakened nerve centres, impart vigor to the tiring brain, prepare for the crisis. A means of remarkable potency in the renewal of decreasing vigor is found in Ferrozone. It brightens up the whole being, imparts a sense of power and strength. By the use of Ferrozone, old age is pushed back twenty years. Ferrozone gives strength, vigor, endurance, vim. Your druggist has it, 50c a box [illegible].

GREAT BRITAIN AND GERMANY SAID TO HAVE APPROACHED A CRISIS

Count Von Buelow Replies to Chamberlain's Remarks Anent German Behavior and their Comment on Boer War

Says Latter is "Biting on Granite"—British Press Comments in Heated Fashion Upon the Injustice of German Comments on the Boer War

London, Jan. 10.—The bitter feeling which has been created in Great Britain and Germany owing to the thoughtless and utterly ill-advised comments of the German press on the conduct of the war in South Africa, has become so accentuated that it has been removed from the domain of the press and the public platform within the walls of the Reichstag itself. The Germans are quite capable of making offensive remarks anent the British but when their own tyrannous and terribly cruel conduct in the Franco-Russian war is mentioned in reply they lose their heads and act as if they themselves were the offended party. This is well illustrated by the latest phase of the controversy, which is evidently approaching a dangerous phase.

While speaking at Edinburgh on October 25th last, Mr. Chamberlain referred to the conduct of the German army in the war of 1870-71, and showed how British moderation in South Africa far exceeded that of the Teutons in France. These remarks went much against the grain of Count von Stolberg-Wernigerode, who in the German Reichstag yesterday denounced such references. The German Foreign Minister, Chancellor Von Buelow then took up the strain and vented his ill-concealed spleen in the following words:

"The last speaker alluded to a reference an English Minister recently made to the German army's conduct in the Franco-German war. Should he, however wish to adduce examples from abroad, it is advisable that he should proceed with caution, as otherwise he may incur the risk of not only being misunderstood, but also of hurting foreign feelings, even though, as I am ready to assume, there was in the case of the present instance no intention of so doing. It is quite comprehensible that a people which has become so thoroughly part and parcel of its glorious army as in Germany should revolt at any appearance of the history of our glorious struggle for national unity being misrepresented. Such a critic, in the words of Frederick the Great, concerning traducers of himself and the German army, is "simply biting on Granite."

BRITISH COMMENT.

Needless to say, these ill-considered remarks are exciting much heated comment in the British newspapers of yesterday. The St. James' Gazette, which calls Count Von Buelow a "swaggering pharisee," says:

"His offensive speech has brought the growing irritation between the two countries into a dangerous sphere.

"Even if Von Buelow has been the head of a Republican Ministry, dependent for its life on a fickle populist opinion, there would have been a little excuse for his gross perversion of facts and breach of international comity."

The St. James' Gazette concludes with expressing the belief that the "Pharisaical impertinence of the German press is profoundly distasteful to the Kaiser, who is manfully striving to stem the torrent which is bearing his Empire towards the Niagara of disaster," and warns Germany that "both eastward and westward of her there is a menace which holds her armed to the teeth in sleepless vigilance, and when the expected catastrophe in Southeastern Europe leaves her alone between the upper and nether millstone she may bitterly regret the loss of the good will of this country, which she is now flinging away with both hands."

"Von Buelow's words cannot fail to be hailed throughout Europe as a snub to Great Britain," says the Pall Mall Gazette in an editorial headed, "The Retort Discourteous."

The Globe accuses Von Buelow of "deliberately pandering to the lowest and most illinformed elements of public opinion in Germany."

The Globe then lectures Emperor William for not "checking the stream of foul lies and obscene carricatures in the German press."

The Westminster Gazette alone deprecates regarding Count Von Buelow's speech as a cause for further disturbing the relations between Great Britain and Germany.

SMALL POX ROUTED BY USE OF VAPOUR

How Cleveland Was Freed From an Expidemic of Smallpox

INFORMATION FOR LOCAL M.D'S

Formaldehyde Gas is Found to be Fatal to the Pestilence—Thorough Disinfection of all Infected Localities Had—How the Campaign was Successfully Waged by the Health Authorities.

Cleveland, O., Jan. 10. — After being scourged with unusual severity by small pox the city of Cleveland is now happily free from all traces of the pestilence, and there is great satisfaction among the citizens generally. The result has been brought about, it is claimed by those in control of the health department by the energetic and judicious use of formaldehyde as a disinfectant. The process employed has been a thorough fumigation of all infected localities with formaldehyde gas, the process being repeated as often as the authorities though necessary, judged from the virulence of the epidemic in any given locality.

Formaldehyde is sold as a commodity in a 40 per cent solution of formaldehyde and water. The pure formaldehyde vapor is produced from the liquid solution by means of a generator which is carried from house to house for the purpose of disinfecting as required. The use of the disinfectant in gaseous form is strongly recommended for the reason that it reaches every part of the room and permeats to every section of the inclosed space where disease germs could possibly find lodging. The sprinkling of a liquid solution of any form of disinfectant is condemned for the reason that it only reaches a portion of the space subject to infection. Consequently, the generator has been called into use with excellent effect.

The process of disinfecting was described by Public Health Officer Martin Friedrich as follows:

"The room must be hermetically sealed in order to prevent the escape of gas and insure its permeation to every exposed surface within the space inclosed. Every drawer and closet in the room should be opened wide and every article of clothing hung freely from the walls. Books should be hung by the corner of one cover in order that the leaves will hand loose and open. Every article of furniture and every object in the room should present, as far as possible, an exposed surface. These precautions are absolutely essential, as the formaldehyde gas is purely a surface disinfectant and will not penetrate into solids. When all is prepared the generator is placed in the room, the heat in the burner applied, the door closed, with every crevice sealed to prevent the escape of gas and the disinfectant left to its work for a period of from twenty minutes to half an hour."

In discussing the effects of the systematic work of disinfecting conducted by the health department, Dr. Friedrich, said that for five years prior to September of this year the city had never been free from smallpox. Between January and September of the present year 1,200 cases were developed. The public health officer noted that in every case where the formaldehyde gas system had been used as a disinfectant no further cases were reported from that immediate neighborhood. He therefore recommended the thorough and systematic disinfection of every house and every structure within the neighborhood where cases of smallpox was under treatment.

Forty generators were procured and forty assistants, divided into squads, under the direction of the department of police, were detailed to the work. The work was continued from the latter part of July until Nov 9.

When the task was nearly completed there were only twelve cases in the city and since September not a single new case has been reported that found its origin in Cleveland. A systematic general disinfection was more easily inaugurated here than one of general vaccination, no prejudice existing against it.

The cost of disinfecting is said to be inconsiderable as compared to the money expended for quarantine purposes during the period when the city was subject to the ravages of the disease.

The Boers Attack the Natives

Johannesburg, Jan. 8.—A large commando of Boers lately attacked Linchwe's tribe, the Bakhatia, on the Philindsburg, killed a number of cattle herds and taking away 60,000 head of cattle.

Linchwe has appealed to the authorities to be allowed to defend his people and to recover his cattle.

Ottawa, Jan. 8.—A cable to the Governor-General says: —"Trooper Lyle Medway, next of kin J. Medway, Medicine Hat, also Alfred Cooper, next to kin R Cooper, Mount Hope, Ont., reported severely wounded at Potchefstroom.

Signed, "CHAMBERLAIN."

Kingston, Ont., Jan. 8.—Captain A. Oranwright, Cape Town, writes to the military authorities here telling of the death of Trooper Chas. Hooper, No. 964 (34.245), Second Imperial Light Horse. He was killed on December 11 in action at Vischgat. He was said to be a cousin of the late member of Parliament of Kingston, and has a brother in the same city.

Trooper Hooper joined at East London on March 9th, 1901. He was a book-keeper, aged 31, and served in the 14th P. W. O. Rifles.

JAPANESE FAVOR FIGHTING RUSSIA

Dissatisfied With Occupation of Manchuria by Russian Troops

RUSSIA'S CHANCES ARE POOR

Her Fleet Could Not Inflict Much Damage on Japan—Opinion of a Lieut. Col. at St. Petersburg

St. Petersburg, Jan. 9.—Lieut.-Colonel Agapajefry, who has recently returned from Manchuria, lectured to the Russian Club. He was of opinion that war with Japan was not at present to be desired by Russia. The occupation of Manchuria by Russian troops, he said, had created great dissatisfaction in Japan, and it was possible that the Japanese Government might have to yield to popular feeling, which was in favor of war. Had war broken out last spring, Russia would have been in a dangerous position, for railway communication had not been completed, and her naval force in the Far East was insufficient, while a small Japanese naval force would have been able to cut off Port Arthur from all supplies, for which that port depended on Vladivostok and Japan itself and at the same time Port Arthur might have been isolated on the land by a sudden descent of Japanese troops. The transport resources of Japan were so great that she could have thrown, without any delay, 70,000 men into Manchuria. She was also in a position to raise an army of 200,000 men, of which 150,000 could be sent within a fortnight to the theatre of war, only 50,000 being retained for home defence. Port Arthur, in that eventuality would be in the position of Sebastopol at the time of the Crimean war, with the additional disadvantage of having behind it a stretch of country inhabited by a foreign and revolted population. Japan, therefore, in the view of the lecturer, let slip a favorable opportunity, by not declaring war at that time. Now, however, Russia would have a better chance of success, but nevertheless she had good reasons not to wish for war with Japan, for the geographical situation of that country would prevent Russia with the weaker fleet, from inflicting as much damage on Japan as Japan could inflict in her turn by a descent on Russian territory, or by a bombardment of Russian ports.

ITALIANS HANGED BY WILL OF GOD

GREAT CONFIDENCE EXPRESSED

Italian Government Expects That American Government Will Prevent Such Incidents in the Future

Rome, Jan. 10.—Signor Prinetti, Minister of Foreign Affairs, in discussing the lynching of Italians at Erwin, U. S., declared that the American Government had neglected nothing that might throw light on the affair. The Italian Government had on this occasion likewise done its duty, nor could Italian officials and diplomatists be accused of negligence. The Italian officials were charged to collect and present the evidence and the proofs to the grand jury, and to act semi-officially towards the Government of the United States so that justice might triumph, but there was great reticence in the statements of the witnesses and it was impossible to identify the culprits. In view of the insuffiency of the proofs the grand jury declared, according to the usual formula, that the lynching took place by the will of God. The Italian Government had expressed the confidence and the hope that the U. S. Government would succeed in preventing such incidents in the future, and had pointed out how serious a thing it was that the Government of the United States should declare itself unable to maintain its engagements in conformity with international treaties. Regarding an indemnity, the Government would ask for none as the price of the blood of its fellow citizens, but it would not object to an indemnity being given to the relations of the victims.

Perfect Cure for Bronchitis.

This disease can be treated only by a remedy carried to the affected parts along with the air breathed, for nature intended these organs for the passage of air alone, and sprays, atomizers and internal medicines utterly fail. But Catarrhozone doesn't fail, for it goes wherever the air breathed goes, and its healing antiseptic vapor is sure to reach every affected part. Catarrhozone is inhaled at the mouth and after passing through every air cell of the breathing organs is slowly exhaled through the nostrils. Catarrhozone protects and heals the inflamed surfaces, relieves congestion, allays inflammation, and perfectly cures all bronchial affections. Price $1. Small size 25c. GEN. BRABANT'S HORSE HAS BEEN DISBANDED

After two Years of Continuous Service in South Africa

GENERAL ELLIOTT CLOSELY CHASING DE WET

One Canadian Killed and Two Others Wounded—Cape Rebel Shot for Firing at an Unarmed Constable

Cape Town, Jan. 10.—Brabant's Horse, a regiment of colonials raised by General Brabant twenty-six months ago, has been disbanded, after two years continuous service. The regiment served with considerable distinction, in no less than seventeen general engagemnts during the war, including the battles of Wepener and Modderfontein. The losses were never very heavy at one time for Brabant's Horse "took the Boer on" absolutely at his own game, but in the aggregate the casualties amounted to a very large number in the two years' continuous work.

Major William Hamilton Merritt, now second in command of the Canadian Mounted Rifles, was at one time a squadron commander in Brabant's Horse.

Johannesburg, Jan. 10.—Closely following his success at Waterval the other day, Major Colen Brander has reported the capture of a Boer laager with 44 of Delarey's men, near Rustenburg, midway between Mafeking and Pretoria. A British column in the northwestern part of the Orange River Colony captured 25 prisoners, while 11 were taken by the Thirteenth Hussars near Oliphant's River. General Elliot is in close touch with Christian Dewet who is moving in the vicinity of the Wilge river. Several stragglers of his commando have been taken by Elliot's advance guard.

The capture of a party of Boers by Col. Du Moulin recently is regarded as highly important. Among the prisoners are Commandants Dutoit and Saul Sarsins. Du Moulin also captured 58 rifles, 2,000 rounds of ammunition and 180 horses.

LAID AT REST

Interment of the Late R. C. McHarrie Conducted Under Masonic Auspices

The funeral of the late R. C. McHarrie, manager of the local branch of the Bank of Commerce, took place from his rooms in the Bank of Commerce building at 2.30 yesterday afternoon under Masonic auspices.

The obsequies was very largely attended by members of Corinthian and Peterborough Lodges A. F. and A. M., together with visiting brethren and many friends and acquaintances. Rev. Dr. Torrance conducted the service at deceased's rooms, and the beautiful and impressive masonic ceremony at the grave at Little Lake Cemetery, was conducted by Wor. Bro. T. N. Greer, Master of Corinthian Lodge, assisted by Ver. Wor. Bro. W. G. Eakins, of Ionic Lodge, Toronto, D.D.G.M.; Wor. Bro. M. A. Morrison, Ver. Wor. Bro. R. M. Dennistoun and Wor. Bro. H. C. Rogers.

The pallbearers were Wor. Bro. W. D. Parker, Wor. Bro. E. H. D. Hall, Wor. Bro. A. St. A. Smith, and Bros. E. C. Compton, A. L. Davis and E. Brown.

Beautiful and costly floral tributes were received from Ionic Lodge A.F. & A.M., Toronto; Corinthian Lodge, Peterborough, of both of which deceased was a member; Mr. and Mrs. A. St. A. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. J. D Collins, Mr. W. G. Morrow, the Peterborough Club, Granite Bowling Club, Toronto; Lawn Bowling Club, Peterborough; the staff of the local branch of the Bank of Commerce; from the officials of the head office.

Many friends and brethren came from a distance to attend the funeral, amongst whom were Messrs. W. Geo. Eakins and R. Northcott, representing Ionic Lodge, Toronto; Dr. Shaw, Keene; Mr. M. Morris, Asst. Manager of the Bank of Commerce, Toronto; Mr. H. W. Fitton, Manager of the Market branch Bank of Commerce, Toronto; Mr. G. M. Gibb, Manager of the Port Perry branch of the Bank of Commerce; Mr. R. M. Playter, Manager of the Queen st. W. branch, Toronto; and Mr. L. Bulster, of Toronto. The latter gentleman was Assistant Manager of the Bank of Commerce in Toronto, twenty years ago, when the late R. C. McHarrie first entered the bank in that city.

SOUTH AFRICAN STOCK

A Comparatively New Field of Investment for Peterborough Capitalists

In today's issue will be found an advertisement of Messrs. Parker & Co., stock brokers, of Toronto who have recently made arrangements with a large London Eng., house to handle all South African stocks, either for cash or on margin. They are prepared to furnish daily quotations by cable from London, and can furnish information regarding any of the stocks.

So far as we know they are the only Canadian firm of brokers to make a speciality of South African stocks, and we understand that while only a short time has elapsed since completing arrangements to handle these shares, the results so far have exceeded their expectations, which would seem to indicate that the public is not averse to purchasing mining stocks provided there is a free market for them, such as London affords.

A number of the South African companies have already resumed operations, and the others are preparing to follow their example, we consider Messrs. Parker & Co., have chosen a most opportune time in bringing this new departure before the notice of the investor.

—The Council will meet on Monday next, for the transaction of business. All the old officers of the township will be re-appointed. They are as follows: Wm. O'Brien, clerk; James Harry, treasurer; Robt. Allen, Assessor; Patrick Ryan, collector. A better lot of municipal officers it would be hard to get, from the Reeve down.

—Reeve McJeney is the man for Galway. He will make a fitting and capable representative in the County Council when the old system of Reeves for that body, comes back again.

—Councillor Allen who is ever on the alert for anything that will help the people, and improve their condition, accompanied Mr. Corbitt in his rounds purchasing cattle for the British Columbia market, and was instrumental in getting a lot of money distributed amongst the farmers of the township.

ARTIST'S PROOF

The New and Decidedly Exquisite Photographic Novelty.

There is something new under the sun—in photography—Artist's Proof it is appropriately called.

Everyone is familiar with the time-honoured method of placing the photograph upon a selected card mount. Right here is where Artist's Proofs depart from the accepted rules of portrait making.

The likeness produced by the Collodio-Carbon process, is printed directly upon parchment paper, the centre of which is embossed to permit a sunken margin to surround the picture, with ample space for a signature. The fascinating density of light and shade in the Carbon, blending, at the edges, into the parchment itself, is a captivating combination; crowned by the Artist's Proof Enclosure, which envelops the entire creation.

In keeping with his well known policy of providing the art-loving public with all that is new, R. M. Roy is now filling orders for Artist's Proof portraits, which will be the reigning success of the season.

PETERBOROUGH, JANUARY 10, 1902

A RECORD YEAR

The Business Done by the Canada Life During the Past Year

The local manager of the Canadian Life Assurance Company received the following letter from Mr. E. W. Cox, the popular general manager, at Toronto, which speaks for itself.

Dear Sir,—While it is yet too early to give you definitely the final figures showing the Company's operations for the past year, I have before me the approximate results, and I hasten to thank you personally and offer my congratulations on the success which has attended the efforts of our field forces in 1901. The new applications received were for assurances aggregating eight million four hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($8,450,000)—a very marked increase over the previous year, and, with one exception, the largest in the Company's history.

The new policies actually paid for during the year represented assurances of about seven million and eighty thousand dollars (7,087,000)—exceeding those of any previous year by over half a million of dollars. This is one of the most gratifying features in the report, as it shows very conclusively that you have all been striving to secure only business of the very best quality.

The income, both from interest earnings and premiums, has been satisfactory and shows a substantial increase over the figures of 1900. The mortality has been favorable, and the assets show a steady growth which I am sure will be much appreciated by all who have the good fortune to hold policies in the Company. Taking the year all around it has indeed been most successful.

Yours truly,
E. W. COX.

BY PROMPT ATTENTION TO THE SYMPTOMS OF DISEASE AND THE LITTLE ILLS OF LIFE YOU WILL AVOID WEEKS AND MONTHS OF SUFFERING.

Paine's Celery Compound

WILL QUICKLY BANISH YOUR TROUBLES AND RESTORE PERFECT HEALTH

Prompt care and attention to the little ills of life will often save weeks and months of suffering. If the common symptoms of rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, kidney troubles and permanent headaches are attended to when first experienced, by use of one or two bottles of Paine's Celery Compound, these beginnings of serious troubles are forever banished. If you are out of sorts, have tired feelings, disturbed sleep, defective digestion, aches in back or side, sluggish circulation or poisoned blood, Paine's Celery Compound will give to all the functions of the body a fresh supply of nerve food, establishing strength and permanent vigor. Its use encourages an abundant supply of pure, fresh blood, without which there can be no health, happiness or real life. Paine's Celery Compound is a matchless remedy in cases of exhausted nerves and foul blood. The use of one bottle is sufficient to prove its value. Beware of worthless imitations sold by some dealers. See that the name PAINE'S is on each wrapper and bottle.

A Comic Opera Strike.

THERE is, as a rule, little that is humorous in a strike. But a recent strike in Columbus, O., is so humorous and at the same time so extraordinary that it seems almost incredible. It sounds as if it took place in Topsy-turvydom instead of in the United States of America. It would make a good libretto for one of Gilbert and Sullivan's crazy operettas.

This is the story of the Columbus strike: C. M. Jones is editor and proprietor of the Columbus "Press-Post"—that is, he was. The paper is now apparently being edited by almost everybody but the editor. It seems that Editor Jones got into trouble with his city editor. The city editor is a member of the Newspaper Writers' Union. Now it has long been a grievance among newspaper reporters that they are not so well treated as the printers, because they have no union. On the other hand, the printers have a union which is the most powerful and prosperous trade union in the country, with the possible exception of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. The reporters have attempted to form unions. But they are like ropes of sand. So they finally decided to organize under the wing of the printers.

In every union printing-office there is a body called "the chapel," presided over by a "father." The foreman represents the employer, the father of the chapel represents the printers. Whenever there is a question at issue, the printers invariably take their orders from the father of the chapel instead of the foreman. So in the office of the "Press-Post," the reporters organized as a newspaper writers' union under the protection of the printers' chapel.

Editor Jones found City Editor Marshall unsatisfactory for various reasons. First, he had criticised some court house officials who were friends of Editor Jones; and, second, he had been "scooped" by the other Columbus papers on a railroad wreck; they had run the wreck with "scare-heads," and City Editor Marshall had not run it at all. Therefore Editor Jones requested Marshall to resign. Marshall refused. Editor Jones then informed him that he was discharged. Marshall at once ordered a strike, and Newspaper Writers' Union No. 2 walked out. Editor Jones attempted to parley with them and offered to secure another editor. They refused to return unless Marshall was replaced. Thereupon Editor Jones broke off negotiations, got ten young men from the State University as reporters, edited their copy himself, and it was sent to the composing-room. The father of the chapel walked to the imposing-stone, rapped thereon with a mallet, a chapel meeting was held, and the printers stopped their work. The father of the chapel informed Editor Jones that if the non-union copy was not removed from the hook the printers would strike. Editor Jones took back his non-union copy. That day the "Press-Post" did not come out. The next day Editor Jones sent the paper to press without any local news, filling it up with narratives of the low-necked gowns at Newport, snake stories, accounts of the shocking attire worn by the young women at Long Branch, and other refined and pleasing miscellany of the kind usually found in the Sunday supplements of great daily newspapers. Unfortunately, Editor Jones, feeling somewhat embittered over the situation, wrote with his red right hand a savage editorial on the labor question and sent it in to the printers. Not being local news, and being written by the editor and proprietor, it might be supposed that they would print it. Not so. Again the unfortunate editor was informed that he must withdraw his non-union copy, or the printers would strike. Editor Jones withdrew his editorial.

At last accounts the "Press-Post" is still running without the local news, and Editor Jones is beseeching President Lynch of the International Typographical Union to devise some means by which he may be allowed to get his paper out.

So the question may be asked, Who is editing the Columbus "Press-Post"? Is it the proprietor, Editor Jones? or is it the discharged employee, City Editor Marshall? or is it the Newspaper Writers' Union No. 2? or is it the father of the Columbus printers' chapel? or is it the president of the International Typographical Union of North America?

Expenses of Society Life in New York.

Mothers of daughters having social aspirations find it very expensive to meet all the social requirements and demands made upon them, as is shown in proceedings in the Supreme Court of New York brought by Mrs. Kate Shippen Roosevelt to have the yearly allowance of her daughter, Dorothy Quincy Roosevelt, increased from $1,500 to $3,000. Even the larger sum will not by any means be sufficient to keep this young lady in good society and meet all the various expenses incidental thereto; but Mrs. Roosevelt says she is willing to pay the additional expenses, which will amount to several thousand dollars annually, out of her own pocket. Miss Roosevelt inherited $100,000 from a deceased uncle, which is being held in trust for her until she becomes of age next year. Inasmuch as her income amounts to $4,000 and Mrs. Roosevelt proved to the satisfaction of William J. A. McKim, the referee, that $3,000 is only a reasonable amount for a young woman of good social position, the increased allowance was granted. In giving her testimony, Mrs. Roosevelt said she had six tutors for her daughter, who, among other things, was being educated in German, French, and Italian. She was also being instructed in elocution, belongs to several social dancing-classes, is a member of golf, tennis and bathing clubs, is fond of riding, and has an English governess. Mrs. Roosevelt added that the needs of her daughter were increasing year by year, that she found entertaining and traveling abroad added greatly to the cost of living, that one of her daughter's greatest incidental expenses was for hire of cabs going to and from social functions, and that a great deal of the social life which young ladies in New York see is where gentlemen are not invited, such as teas, receptions, etc.

Got a Chronic Headache?—Ten chances to one the secret of your suffering is that "white man's burden," Catarrh. Here's a sentence from one man's evidence for Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder—"One application gave the instant relief, cleared the nasal passages and stopped the pain in my head." The old proverb: "To be at peace prepare for war," is the secret of the larger part of life's successes, whether of nations or individuals.

The difference between the healthy, happy mother who has healthy children to nurse and nourish, and the weak, nervous mother, with a weakling child, is mostly a difference of preparation.

The great preparative for motherhood is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It tranquilizes the nerves, encourages the appetite and induces refreshing sleep. It gives the mother strength to give her child. It imparts elasticity and strength to the organs of maternity so that the baby's advent is practically painless.

"I take pleasure in writing you to let you know about your 'Favorite Prescription,'" says Mr. E. E. Fricke, of Petersburg, Menard Co., Ill., Box 367. "My wife had been sick nearly all her life, and after trying everything I could think of I made up my mind to try 'Favorite Prescription.' I sent to Chicago and got six bottles, which my wife took, a tablespoonful three times a day, until the baby came. She felt better after taking the first bottle, and when baby was born he weighed nine and a half pounds. To-day he is six months old and weighs twenty-two pounds. He is as good a child as any one could wish. The doctor says he is as healthy as any baby could be, and also the doctor says your 'Favorite Prescription' was the cause of such a healthy baby. I felt I owed you this much for the good you did my wife and myself. I hope you will mention this to others who may be in need of such help, and you may refer them to me, as I would be glad to tell of the good of such a valuable medicine."

Asthma Cure Free

Asthmalene Brings Instant Relief and Permanent Cure in All Cases,

Sent ABSOLUTELY FREE on receipt of postal. Write your name and address plainly.

CHAINED FOR TEN YEARS

EVERY BOTTLE BRINGS RELIEF.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken, yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-size bottle."

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER
Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.
NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO.:

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows at 130th street, New York. I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the 1st of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully,

O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle and I am ever grateful. I have a family of four children and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

"Let me mix it,' exclaimed Lord Otway, feeling an intense delight steal into his heart at being allowed to wait on her, to do something for her.

"And then, miss, if I may make so bold, I should advise you to let his lordship and me help you back into the house again."

"Not for a few minutes, Dorcas," pleaded Katharine, lifting her eyes, however, not to the servant's face,but to Lord Otway's. "I promise not to move, and I—I think I shall feel better out in the air. I am so sorry I gave you such a fright; it was very silly of me."

Dorcas hesitated a moment; then, with a sharp look at the young clergyman, said:

"Well, if his lordship will see that you don't try to walk for a while,and will come and call me when you want to come in, I'll give in, miss; not but what I think you'd be best indoors now."

"Oh, the sunshine and air will do her good; and I will promise to take care of her Dorcas. You can trust me, can't you?"

"I'd trust your face, my lord, long beyond another's written word," was Dorcas's reply, as she moved away and left them alone.

"Dorcas has evidently a higher opinion of your face than mine, Lord Otway," Katharine said, schooling her agitated nerves to appear calm and at her ease, while all the time she was quivering in every limb from excitement, fear, and mental pain mingled.

Lord Otway fixed his frank, blue eyes on her.

"Dorcas is clearly wanting in discernment, then, Miss Brereton," he said lightly yet earnestly. He paused a moment. "Perhaps I had better leave you now?" he said; "for I am afraid I bore you, and perhaps you would rather be alone?"

Katharine stretched out her small white hand in protest.

"No, no; please stay— that is, if you care to. You— you do not bore me, and I wish you to stay.'

A flush mounted to his face.

"If you only knew how much pleasure it is to me to be here," he exclaimed, drawing up his chair again. "I suppose there is something in affinities, after all, Miss Brereton; for I feel there is a strong wave of sympathy between us two— a sympathy that is none the less because a few weeks ago neither of us knew there was such another existing in the world at all."

"Your sympathy took very tangible form," was Katharine's reply. She sighed a broken sigh, then, more eagerly, she said, "May not mine be used in the same way? You— you were telling me of your troubles just now, Lord Otway, when I was foolish enough to faint. Will— will you not tell me more?"

"I don't think it is the best topic I could choose. It was selfish of me to allude to my sorrow before you. I should have remembered how delicate you are, and——"

"No, no, Lord Otway, you are wrong; I am glad you told me of—of your loss; yes, glad. It takes me out of myself; it is the first link in the chain of friendship that is to bind us together. Don't forget you have promised I am to be your friend!"

Her quick, light tones jarred on Ormande's sensitive ear. He was too thoroughly acquainted with mental suffering not to know the signs when he met them. Katharine was not merely worried; she was deeply troubled and disturbed.

He longed to beg her to confide in him, to ask her to unburden herself to him, and let him soothe and comfort her. It was not so much the minister as the man that urged this feeling; but he crushed it down.

Their friendship was too young to permit of this. He must not presume upon it.

Her eagerness, her agitation did not seem to him to arise from any outward thing, but were merely the outcome of her distressed mind, and her interest in his trouble seemed to him to be as much a desire to forget her own in hearing of another's.

Katharine saw his hesitation.

"You loved your cousin?" she faltered.

"As a brother," Ormande replied sadly. "We only met in late years, Miss Brereton; circumstances had occurred to separate our boyhood. His mother was my father's sister, and, consequently, sister also to Lady Blanche; and when she married Conroy Adair she was considered to have brought disgrace upon herself and the house of Thanecourt. Poor Aunt Anne! hers was a troubled life! I do so regret, Miss Brereton, that it was not in my power to have assisted her in her sorrows, but this was an impossibility; firstly, because I knew absolutely nothing about her beyond the fact that I had an aunt named Anne; and, secondly, because my father and Aunt Blanche were so determined and severe in their treatment of her, and kept her rigidly out of my reach. I might never have known anything more of her had not fate thrown poor Craven and myself together accidentally."

He paused, and Katharine drew a short, sharp breath; her hands were trembling involuntarily; the very mention of that name, Craven Adair, seemed to pierce her heart like a sword thrust, yet she longed to hear more, to hear the end.

"It was at Marsh Lea, a small watering place on the south coast. I had run down there for a few days' rest and change of air, and chance brought me face to face with my aunt and her two children. It was a sad meeting, Miss Brereton, for the mother was in a dying condition, and, indeed, expired three days after. She had made herself, her poverty, and her anxiety known to me. I tried hard to bring about a reconciliation with my father and Aunt Blanche, but I was too late, and all I could do was to enlist their sympathy for Craven and Marian. When all was over I think Aunt Blanche would have given her right hand to have seen and kissed her sister once again before she died. She never said much to me, for my aunt is such a proud, reticent spirit, Miss Brereton, but I know by her face that she was wretched. She wrote at once and told Craven he must look on her house as his home, and that Marian henceforth should be to her as her own daughter."

"Well?" breathed Katharine, hurriedly.

"Alas, it was not well, Miss Brereton. Craven absolutely refused to have anything to do with Lady Blanche or my father. He resented their treatment of his parents, and stoutly declared that his sister and he would battle the world together. He, too, was such a proud nature—a real Thanecourt."

Katharine shivered; she had before her eyes at that moment the image of that fair, frank, honest face—a face on which shame or disgrace could never have written one line. Her cheeks grew a shade paler, but Ormande was gazing steadily ahead, a mist of unshed tears dimming his gaze, and he did not even look at her face.

"With me only would Craven have anything to do," he went on after a moment's pause. "He had grown fond of me, thank Heaven! and looked to me as he might have done to a brother or a father for affection and advice. We saw a great deal of one another, despite the anger of my family, for Aunt Blanche and my father were considerably incensed at Craven's independence, and I think— I hope—I was able to help him. Marian, poor child, is a permanent invalid. She is deformed, and she worshiped Craven as something higher than the sun. I shudder when I think of her grief now."

Katharine's two small hands clenched either side of the arm-chair; the tension on her nerves was so great she felt almost as if she must shriek aloud in her pity and ask him to stop; and still she would hear more— she must know all.

"Where— where is she?" she forced herself to ask, her voice sounding hollow in her own ears.

"She will be with us to-night," replied Ormande, brushing his hand surreptitiously over his moist eyes. "I shall wait till she comes, and then go up to London and search for Craven myself."

"But"—Katharine's whisper was almost inaudible—"did— did you not say that he— he was dead?"

"I repeated what I have been told, Miss Brereton. This morning Aunt Blanche received an agonized letter from poor Marian, telling how nearly three weeks ago, Craven left her one morning, so he said, on important business. When she asked him further what this business was, he laughed and told her it was a secret, but she should know when he returned. Although he laughed, Marian seemed to gather that he was uneasy, urged to this thought more especially as of late he had been very depressed and wretched. This the child had attributed to the fact that he could get nothing to do. He had been in a moderately good city berth, but this had come to a summary end— how, Marian could not tell."

Alas! alas! poor Katharine knew only too well— in her ears rang the poor boy's complaint to Gordon Smythe: "I have been discredited through you! ruined by you!" She moistened her white lips with her tongue, and drooped her head with intolerable shame and pain, that she, her father's beloved little Kattie, should be so linked to this sorry tale of woe.

"I have been kept so very busy in my parish the last few months," Lord Otway said, with self-reproach and sadness in his voice, "that I was not able to see my cousins as often as I should have liked; but I, too, in the few times we met, saw that Craven was not happy; I feared then, as I fear now, that he had got into a bad set— not willingly, poor boy, but by some mischance. I remember once his telling me, with much elation, that he should be a millionaire before long, and when I pressed him to explain, he laughed and put me off. I knew he had a little capital— the money, in fact, which they both inherited from their mother, who, as a daughter of the Earl of Thanecourt, of course had her own dowry when she married; and remembering this money, I contented myself with feeling assured Craven and Marian could never starve. Poor Marian's letter undeceived me this morning. But I must not bore you too much, Miss Brereton; you are looking very, very pale; I—'

Katharine waved her hand.

"Please go on," she said huskily; "I—I am deeply interested; I want to hear more. Your cousin; what—what of his death? How—'

Ormande's face wore a perplexed and sad look.

"Craven has mysteriously disappeared; Marian has waited day after day for him to return, but not one sign of him, dead or alive, has come to her. At last, driven to desperation by fear, grief and poverty, for the child has not a penny in the world, having always looked to Craven for her support, she wrote off yesterday to my aunt entreating her to help her. I have this very instant despatched a maid to London to bring Marian here direct, and she will arrive here this evening; I wanted to go myself, but Aunt Blanche had some whim on this subject, and refused to let me do so, saying she needed me at home more.'

"And— and you are sitting here with me?"

It was a simple, commonplace sentence, but could Ormande have known the torture it gave Katharine to utter it, he would have been amazed and distressed. As it was, he was ignorant, and he colored up quickly as he answered:

"Aunt Blanche will forgive me, Miss Brereton, especially when she knows how much comfort your sympathy has given me."

"Oh, if I could do something! If I only could do something!"

The cry broke from Katharine's lips involuntarily. Ormande's eyes grew tender; he knew he had not been mistaken in the beauty of this girl's nature.

"There is much for your noble heart to do," he said softly, "when Marian comes. You will let me bring Marian to you, Miss Brere—"

"Oh, no! Oh, Heaven, no!" interrupted Katharine, losing all self-control at bare thought of standing face to face with the sister, while her mind was filled with the memory of the brother's murder; but a glance at Ormande's startled expression recalled her to the necessity of crushing down her agitation before this man.

"I beg your pardon, Lord Otway," she said; "I forgot what I was saying. I moved my foot without thinking, and—' Then more hurriedly, "Heaven grant I may be allowed to help and comfort your cousin in her sorrow! Heaven grant it!" A prayer that came from the depths of her agonised heart.

Ormande looked at her anxiously.

"I know I have tired you out, Miss Brereton," he said remorsefully.

"You will never let me come again. I wish I could do something for you."

Katharine shivered slightly, and passed one of her cold, trembling hands over her burning eyes.

"I—I think I will go in now, Lord Otway; I am very tired."

"I will call Dorcas," Ormande said hurriedly, overwhelming himself with reproach as he glanced at her blanched face. "I—I am afraid I shall not be allowed to come and see you again Miss Brereton."

"This —this disappearance of your cousin need not necessarily be death. People have vanished before, and yet come back," said Katharine, eagerly.

"If it be given to human hands to trace him, Miss Brereton," was Ormande's reply, 'mine shall be the ones to do it. As I said just now, I cannot bring myself to think that Craven is dead; and were it not for poor Marian's pitiful certainty on this point, I should not allow the notion to exist for a moment. Of course, it is horribly strange; particularly so in connection with Craven, whose love for his sister was so great that he never willingly left her for more than an hour together. But, like you, I shall not be satisfied that the poor boy is dead until I have seen his dead body, or at least his last resting-place."

Katharine shuddered, her hands clasped themselves together with a convulsive movement. Was not that grave riveted in her mind forever? When should she be able to turn her eyes without seeing that yawning pit, with the agonized young face standing out with ghastly clearness from the blackness?

"You must really go in now," he said hastily. "I will send Dorcas as I pass the window —you would prefer her help to mine, I think. Good-by for to-day."

Katharine put one of her small, trembling hands into his. If he had hoped that she would take his aid into the house he was disappointed.

When he reached the edge of the lawn he looked back, and his brows contracted, as he saw that she had buried her face in her two hands, as though she were weeping bitterly.

CHAPTER VIII.

When Lord Otway called the following day at the Lawn, he was met by the intelligence that Katharine was extremely ill, and was compelled to remain in her room.

He had sounded his poor little Cousin Marian, so far as it was possible, and now, having seen her safely, and it must be added, tenderly cared for by Lady Blanche, who never did things by halves, Ormande was going to devote the remainder of his holiday in searching for Craven Adair.

Lord Otway turned away from Miss Weston's door with a sigh. Not until this moment did he realize how deeply and passionately he had grown to love Katharine Brereton.

He should have liked to have seen her before he started on this sad and rather hopeless task; he longed to have carried away the memory of her sweet voice wishing him God-speed and success; but it was not to be, and so the young man smothered a sigh of regret, and with a lingering look at Katharine's window, took his departure to Northminster Station.

• • •

The end of July was fast approaching; in a corner of a country lane, overshadowed by wide-spreading trees, with a brook rippling by conveniently at the foot of the tiny hill, stood a traveling caravan; while a brisk whistle, a strong smell of tobacco, and the tap, tap of a hammer, soon led one to discover the master of the van busy mending an old chair.

A boy of about ten years was playing on the steps, and a smaller child was seated beside the smoker, crowing to itself.

Tap, tap went the hammer, then came a break, and a voice called from the house on wheels:

"Jim!"

"Hallo!" was Jim's response, turning his head to look backwards.

"Jim!" A woman emerged with a bundle of wet rags she had been washing in her well-browned hands. "Jim, he's orful bad to-night."

"I heerd 'im," replied Jim. "What's he adoin' now? Is he a-sleepin', missis?"

The woman wrung out her rags of garments and flung them on the hedge to dry. She shook her head.

"No, he's in one of them faint likes Jim. I don't feel comfortable about 'im. He don't get no better, and that's just the blessed truth."

"Well, what's to be done, Maria? We can't chuck the poor cove out 'ere to die. We've done our best for him so long, we might go on a little while longer."

"I tell you I ain't comfortable like, Jim. It was all very well at the beginnin', we expectin' every minit as he'd be better and be hisself agin, but wot are we to do if he gets worser? Wot then? We can't pay no funeral, and that yer know as well as I does, Jim."

Jim smoked on quietly and hammered at his chair for a moment,then he looked up again.

"Wot's to be done, Maria?"

The woman paused.

"I'll tell you," she said, slowly, as with an air of a person arrived at a conclusion after much deliberation. "You'll just march down to the village and fetch up the doctor chap, and then we'll put 'im" with a jerk of the thumb backwards, "into the work'us infirmary —or the 'sylum. I know there's one 'ere."

Jim was silent for another spell.

"Well," he said at last, pushing back the chair and surveying it with much satisfaction, "I suppose you're right, as per usual, Maria, and after all we've stuck by the fop so long it's only fair some one should ta' a turn now. Here, shoot us over me coat; I'll be off to the village at once; we maun get it settled right away."

He pushed his long arms into the nondescript garment called by courtesy a coat, then lifting the child up kissed it before giving it into the mother's hands, and with his pipe still between his teeth, turned down the lane and was soon out of sight.

The air outside was still, save for an occasional croak of a toad, the munching of the horses, or the buzz of the insect world seeking its rest; but inside there was the continual sound of some one in pain— a perpetual low moaning, then a feeble, hoarse cry:

"Help! Help! I am— help!" and then the moaning again.

The woman's face softened as she sat alone.

"Poor chap!" she muttered once, and going in she moistened a bandage in some water, and bent over the rough, makeshift of a bed.

To Be Continued.

When You Know How.

"I WILL be beautiful," she said, as she turned away from the mirror. "Surely in this modern, progressive age it is possible for any girl to acquire beauty."

So she invested in all kinds of cosmetics, had them applied by an artist, and went to a big ball. The next morning she scanned the society columns of the papers eagerly, but there was not a word about "the beautiful Miss Brown." She merely figured among those who were "also present."

"Still," she added, "it is possible to be beautiful when you know how, and I will experiment until I discover the secret."

Thereupon she employed a beauty doctor, and was rubbed and massaged every day for a month or more, but it was no use. The gossip departments of the papers spoke of this girl and that girl as "beautiful," but never of "the beautiful Miss Brown."

"Possibly," she thought, "something is the matter with my gowns. Much depends upon proper harmony or contrast, which often makes the beauty. I will have one designed especially for me by the most gifted of costumers."

The papers said she was "beautifully gowned," but that was all.

"I will become engaged," she cried, in despair. "If necessary, I will marry. Brides are almost invariably beautiful."

But when her engagement was announced the papers merely referred to her as "the charming and gifted Miss Brown."

"Alas!" she exclaimed, "can I not be beautiful? Is that great boon possessed by so many girls, no more favored by nature than I am, to be always denied to me? What is life to me, if I am thus handicapped? A mockery, truly! I will have none of it."

In this humor she went boating, and, giving it the appearance of an accident, deliberately fell into the water, from which she was quickly rescued by an athletic young man.

"Why," she cried, the next day, as she thought it all over, "was I not allowed to die?"

Then her glance fell upon a daily paper, and her eyes instantly brightened.

"Gallant rescue of a beautiful girl," she read. "Pretty Adele Brown, the beauty of the season, saved from a watery grave."

"Why, of course," she commented, thoughtfully. "It's very simple when you know how. Now I think of it, a rescue or a scandal will make a girl beautiful any day."—N.Y. "Town Topics."

Funny Answers.

An English teacher, commenting on the "wonderfully funny" answers given by his pupils to questions, cites the following specimens:

A boy, aged ten, thus answers a question as to the cause of the Transvaal disturbances: "Krugger and Kannerbulism is one. He is a man of blud. Mr. Chamberling has wrote to him sayin' come out and fite or else give up the blud of the English you have took. he is a beardutchman and a wickid heethin. lord Kitchener has sent for his geary blud and to bring back his scanderlus hed ded or alive."

An essay on Gladstone, by a boy of eleven, states: "Mr. Gladstone lovd everybody. he lovd publicans and cinners and Irishmen. he wanted the irish to come to England and have home reel, but Mr. Chamberlin says, no, no. so stars he got his blud up and killd Mr. Parnel. Mr. Gladstone died with great rispect and is burried in Westminster with pieceful ashes."

Do Plants Reason?

DO plants think and reason? Mr. Francis Darwin, the distinguished son of a world-famous father, would almost make us believe they do by the lecture he delivered recently in connection with the British Association meeting at Glasgow. Through a long course of experiments and observations, conducted on his father's principle of gathering facts instead of pursuing theories, Mr. Darwin is able to show, by what seems conclusive proof, that plants control to a certain extent their own growth. They adapt themselves to the influence of gravity by means analogous to the instinctive actions of animals. Man does not walk by a reasoned theory of the adaptation of his limbs to the operation of gravity. He walks by instinct, and keeps himself from falling by instinctive motions of his limbs, tutored by organs of sensation. Plants, says Mr. Darwin, grow upwards by similar interaction of organs of sensation and motion. Moreover, each plant interprets correctly the conditions in which it can best grow and thrive. If you turn the tip of a stem downwards, the plant will bend it upwards. Have we here any indication of qualities which in man are called mental? asks Mr. Darwin. Have plants memory and desire? To that tremendous question Mr. Darwin is not yet prepared with a full answer. But he inclines to the belief that mind and life are ever implicated the one with the other. What life is we are no nearer knowing than before. Nor what death is. Nor what is the purpose of change of individuals from so-called life to so-called death, allied with constant reproduction of the type. But if plants have mind and desire, it is a strange thought that the garden rose-tree tortured by prunings, cuttings, and tyings may be sighing with envy of the free dog-rose in the hedgerows.

A set of rules for young men to follow are those laid down by a man who built up an immense business, the ramifications of which extended all over the United States. They will bear perusal and are as follows:

Keep good company or none. Never be idle.

If your hands cannot be usefully employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind.

Always speak the truth. Make few promises.

Live up to your engagements. Keep your own secrets, if you have any.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

'No Cure, No Pay,' is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of The Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in affecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. Johns, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Don't Allow Operation for Cancer

There is a simpler, safer and more effective Method of Treatment.

Dr. J. C. Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U. S.A., in a paper he read before the Ohio State Medical Society, May 1895, said: "I have operated in a considerable number of cases of Cancer recently, and with one exception all have died within fourteen months after the operation."

This statement of a prominent Surgeon, should make any one suffering from cancer, hesitate before submitting to operation and consider carefully the evidence offered on behalf of the new Constitutional remedy, which cures Cancers, Tumors and all malignant growths, without the necessity of operation. It is a simple vegetable medicine that searches out and destroys the cancer growths, completely eradicates the disease, and at the same time, builds up and invigorates the system.

Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., will be pleased to send full particulars of this treatment, in a plain, sealed wrapper.

Hunt Club Shoot

For some time past there has been considerable rivalry, in talk at any rate—between the members of the Gold Lake Hunt Club, and the Eagle Lake Hunt Club. Some time ago one club challenged the other club to shoot, at a match, the club making the lowest score to pay for an oyster supper. From this source comes all the talk. A meeting of the clubs was called for, quite recently, and while one club was represented, the other was not.

The referee has called the match for Tuesday next, Jan. 14th, at 1.30 p.m. sharp. The club that crowed so much in the start had better show up this time and not show the white feather.

Remember the date, Tuesday, Jan. 14, at 1.30 p.m., sharp.

A Birthday Party.

A number of friends and well wishes assembled at the handsome home of Mr. and Mrs. John Nugent, Brock street, on Tuesday evening, and were in quiet possession of the premises when their hosts returned for a church meeting. Mr. Jeffries, as spokesman, read an address to Mr. Nugent, which had been carefully prepared and contained flattering allusions to the popular host, wishing him continued good fortune and many, many happy returns of his birthday. The address was written with the biggest sized pen, and was 27 feet long, more or less. It was accompanied by the sweetest token of regard we ever saw, in the shape of a walking stick. Mr. Nugent replied in felicitous terms, after which the party proceeded to make themselves at home.

St. Lukes Entertainment

St. Luke's Sunday School room was filled to overflowing on Wednesday evening with the parents and friends of the Sunday School children. The room was suitably decorated with evergreens etc., for the occasion.

Mr. H. A. Peck acted as chairman, in his usual happy manner. On the platform with him was the rector, Rev. E. A. Langfeldt. Miss Edith Burnham acted as accompanist.

After devotional exercises by the Rector a splendid programme was rendered, which was followed by the distribution of the prizes.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

—Mr. Robert Fair is confined to his house through illness.

—Mr. John Walsh, Hastings, has been elected in the Tanners' section of the Ontario Board of Trade.

—Mr. Charlie Lagros left on Wednesday for a trip to the Pacific Coast. He will cross to the Atlantic before returning to town.

—Mr. A. Stevenson, traveller for Wm. Gray & Sons, carriage and sleigh manufacturers, was in town yesterday.

—Mr. Pearson, of Belleville, representing the Sawyer Massey Co., Hamilton, was in town yesterday.

The Times had the pleasure of a call yesterday from Mr. Erland Lee, of Stoney Creek (near Hamilton) who is one of the speakers at the County Farmers' Institute meetings now being held.

—Messrs. W. P. Roper and A. W. Roper, Montreal, F. E. Roper, New York, and Miss Roper, of Montreal, are in town, called here by the sudden death of their father, Mr. J. H. Roper.

May Cause Serious Trouble

The Times yesterday published a notice, announcing the marriage of Miss Ethel Bradburn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bradburn, and Mr. Amos Wood, by the Rev. J. C. Davidson, on December 28th last. The notice was untrue, and was received by this journal in the regular way. There is not the slightest word of truth in the report. Whether the notice was sent to us as a joke or as an act of malice, cannot at present be ascertained, but the culprit is equally liable in either case, and The Times is prepared to co-operate to the fullest extent with the parties interested in bringing the author of the notice to the bar of justice.

Some people do not seem to know, although warning has been given before, that it is a serious offence to send a false notice of this kind to the papers for publication. Recently the Hamilton news papers were used in a similar way, and in a short time succeeded in fastening the blame on the guilty one. Prosecution and punishment followed, the guilty one was fined and imprisoned. The Times expresses the strongest hope, that the miscreant in the present case may be detected, and no stone will be left unturned, by the friends of the young people who were treated in such an unjust manner and who are naturally indignant at such a report being circulated.

A RECORD YEAR

The local manager of the Canadian Life Assurance Company received the following letter from Mr. E. W. Cox, the popular general manager, at Toronto, which speaks for itself.

Dear Sir,—While it is yet too early to give you definitely the final figures showing the Company's operations for the past year, I have before me the approximate results, and I hasten to thank you personally and offer my congratulations on the success which has attended the efforts of our field forces in 1901. The new applications received were for assurances aggregating eight million four hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($8,450,000)—a very marked increase over the previous year, and, with one exception, the largest in the Company's history.

The new policies actually paid for during the year represented assurances of about seven million and eighty thousand dollars (7,087,000)—exceeding those of any previous year by over half a million of dollars. This is one of the most gratifying features in the report, as it shows very conclusively that you have all been striving to secure only business of the very best quality.

The income, both from interest earnings and premiums, has been satisfactory and shows a substantial increase over the figures of 1900. The mortality has been favorable, and the assets show a steady growth which I am sure will be much appreciated by all who have the good fortune to hold policies in the Company. Taking the year all around it has indeed been most successful.

Yours truly,
E. W. COX.

All Times and Places.

A leading retail clothier in New York tells why "the most successful advertisers the world over pin themselves to the newspaper as being the best method." The chief reasons are that "the newspaper goes into the homes at all times, in all weather; travelers read it, and so do stay-at-homes; all other kinds of advertising are lost to those who are confined to the house, but these read their newspaper, and their influence is strong. The certainty of its being read by the general public is the great advantage of the newspaper advertisement." The secret of The Times' superiority as an advertising medium is because it is the great family newspaper of the Midland District, going direct to the homes of the people. It is not a street paper, but a home paper.

My Dear Sir:—Yours of the 14th inst to hand, and because of business, you will pardon my delay in making reply. I am pleased to note the wonderful success of the Canada Business College, and as my mind goes back to some 18 years ago, and I was then permitted to be one of your students, I wish to assure you with a grateful heart, that I have never regretted the many pleasant and happy days I spent in your school. I say pleasant, because I always found you courteous and kind to all, and happy, because I first learned from you the true principles of a business career and which I was called upon to adopt.

Wishing you every success, I am Sir,
Yours Truly,
A. A. WILSON.

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

Are looked upon by competent judges as bound to prove a very remunerative investment if bought at the present low prices. Already some fifteen companies have resumed crushing, and every week from now on will see operations commenced on other properties, which have been shut down since the outbreak of the war, and a big advance in prices cannot long be delayed.

We are the only firm in Canada making a specialty of South African shares, and have just completed arrangements with a large London, Eng., firm of brokers, which enables to buy shares on 20 per cent. margin or for cash, as desired. Formerly interest at the rate of 10 per cent, per annum was charged when carrying stocks on margin. We have made arrangements to carry our clients for 6 per cent.

Mining in South Africa is not an experiment, but has been proved a success, as dividends in excess of 250 per annum have been paid from earnings. The WEMMER G. M CO. of Johannesburg, recently declared a dividend of 150 per cent.

Latest advices predict a substantial increase in the following shares:—BRITISH SOUTH AFRICA (Chartereds), BULUWAYO EXPLORATION, KAFFIR CONSOLS, KLERKSDORPS, NEIDELBERG ESTATES AND SALISBURY DISTRICTS. Full information and daily quotations can be obtained on application to

RED-LETTER

MOVING SALE.

Eager buyers made the CITY CLOTHING STORE the busiest store in town on Saturday—the opening day of our great Red-Letter Moving Sale. And the general verdict was that the sale was "a straight business transaction." There was no lack of confidence in our bona fide intentions and reductions, and the pronounced success of the opening day is going to be kept up.

The Sale is now in Full Blast

The Red Tickets are here to speak for themselves, and show that slashing reductions all over the store is the rule. Those who have not yet bought their Winter Clothing, Underwear or Furnishings, couldn't strike a luckier time to save money. Those who are supplied are advised that it will pay them to buy ahead for future use.

The Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

PATENTED 10TH MARCH, 1894

For hard or soft coal, coke or peat. The only coal stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

THE STAR is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion———why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

THE STAR has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica,

After being filled the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

THE STAR is 25 per cent. more economical than any other stove.

More than 5,000 are in use in the lower provinces.

PRICE LIST

No.		Height		Diameter.		Price.
0	——	24½ in.	——	9 in.	——	$11.80
1	——	30½ in.	——	9 in.	——	12.00
2	——	34 in.	——	10½ in.	——	15.00
3	——	37½ in.	——	12 in.	——	19.20
4	——	41 in.	——	15 in.	——	28.80

DIRECTIONS

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention.

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room, the size of which is 45 by 33 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 "Star" stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The "Star" gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 STAR coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star and it requires a minimum of attention.

Imperial Government Ask That Canadian Nurses be Sent—Lovatt's Scouts' Good Work in South Africa

Bloemfontein, Jan. 11.— Yesterday eight Boers attempted to drive 130 horses across the line between Bloemfontein and Kroonstad. The blockhouse garrison captured all the horses but the Boers escaped.

Capt. Tucker, of the Constabulary, was severely wounded in a fight with a Boer force under Theron at the Vet River on January 4. He has since died. Commandant Theron escaped by swimming the river and riding away on a horse barebacked.

PRESENTED WITH D.S.O.

Halifax, N. S., Jan. 11.—Capt. J. Edwards Leckie, of the Canadian Mounted Rifles, and formerly of Strathcona's Horse, was to-night presented with the Distinguished Service Order medal. The presentation was made by Governor Jones in the presence of General O'Grady-Haly, Col. Biscoe, and a large number of officers.

Colonel Evans is going to give citizens of Halifax a treat to-morrow afternoon. He has arranged for his regiment of 900 mounted horsemen to march through the principal streets. This will be in connection with the inspection by General O'Grady-Haly.

NURSES TO GO BY LONDON

Ottawa, Jan. 11.—A cable was received by the Governor-General to-day from the War Office asking that the five nurses who were accepted for service in South Africa be sent forward to London immediately. They will report on arrival to the Quartermaster-General at the War Office, and that officer will make arrangements for their transport to South Africa.

Col. Macdonald, director of military stores, has practically furnished all the equipment for the Mounted Rifles which is considered good work in the short time that the colonel has had at his disposal.

APPOINTED TO HOSPITAL CORPS.

Kingston, Ont., Jan. 11.— Dr. G. C. Farrier, who graduated from Queen's Medical College two years ago, has been appointed a member of the Canadian Field Hospital Corps for South Africa. He and Daniel Eby left for Halifax to-night.

LOVAT'S SCOUTS' GOOD WORK.

Pretoria, Jan. 11.—The captures of Boers by the British columns continue at the average rate. Fifty prisoners are reported as having been taken this morning. Lovat's Scouts took the largest batch of prisoners near Aliwal North yesterday. Gen. Colvile's column captured a smaller number at Kopjes River, in the Vryheid district.

Col. Allenby has found the second gun lost by Col. Benson in the fight with the Boers at Brakenlaagt about two months ago. The other gun was recaptured by Gen. Bruce Hamilton a few weeks after it had been lost.

SLOW PROGRESS IN PHILIPPINES

General Funston Gives Little Hope of an Early End of War

ARMY AND NAVY AT WORK

They Are Co-Operating in an Effort to Force the Rebels to Come in and Give Up Their Arms

San Francisco, Jan. 10.— Though the Americans have been pouring away at the Filipinos for close upon five years they seem to have made as little impression upon that degenerate people as the British have made upon the energetic Boers in two years. General Funston the "slick" capturer of Aguinaldo, who knows as much about the situation as anybody, thus described it in a speech made here last night:

"There is little that can be added to the news that has been sent out from Manila by telegraph. In Batangas our troops are making good progress and in Leyte the situation is very promising. Samar is a puzzle. The island is being raked from side to side by columns of scouts, but it is very difficult to locate the insurgents. The navy blockade is very effective, however, and we may be able to starve the insurgents out and compel a surrender of the armed forces there, which number about 3,500 men, in a few months. The army and navy are co-operating in an effort to force the rebels to come in, and give up their arms, and good results may be looked for soon.

"The work of the civil commission is progressing satisfactorily, but military rule must be preserved in those provinces where stubborn and influential leaders hold the ignorant and bloodthirsty natives in the palm of their hands and mould their opinions at will."

ARTIST'S PROOF

The New and Decidedly Exquisite Photographic Novelty.

There is something new under the sun —in photography—Artist's Proof it is appropriately called.

Everyone is familiar with the time-honored method of placing the photograph upon a selected card mount. Right here is where Artist's Proofs depart from the accepted rules of portrait making.

The likeness produced by the Collodio-Carbon process, is printed directly upon parchment paper, the centre of which is embossed to permit a sunken margin to surround the picture, with ample space for a signature. The fascinating density of light and shade in the Carbon, blending, at the edges, into the parchment itself, in a captivating combination; crowned by the Artist's Proof Enclosure, which envelops the entire creation.

In keeping with his well known policy of providing the art-loving public with all that is new, R. M. Roy is now filling orders for Artist's Proof portraits, which will be the reigning success of the season.

See the Artist's Proof display at the entrance of Roy's Studio, 140 1-2 Hunter Street—then go upstairs and ask questions.

GHOULS STOLE THREE BODIES

Taken Through Ventilation Shaft of Kingston Cemetery Vault

PIECES OF FLESH WERE FOUND

The Corpses Were Hauled Over a Barbed Wire Fence and Dragged Over the Ground

Kingston, Jan. 11.—Additional particulars of the theft of three female bodies from the cemetery vault show that at least four men were engaged in the job. They cut an inch iron bar in a ventilator, some distance above their heads, making an opening about 14 inches wide. The bodies were taken from the coffins, stripped of grave garments and hoisted through the ventilator. They were then dragged over the ground a distance of half a mile, lifted away in a rig. In lifting the bodies over the fence they came in contact with the barbs and pieces of flesh and patches of hair were left hanging on the sharp points. One woman, whose remains were placed in the vault about ten days ago, weighed 300 pounds in life.

The bodies removed were those of Miss Matilda Cropley, who hailed from Ottawa, and died at Rockwood Hospital for the Insane. The other remains were those of Miss Margaret Healey, who died in the Hotel Dieu a few days ago, and Mrs. Hughes, the mother of John Hughes guard in the penitentiary. A search of the medical department of Queen's University failed to disclose any trace of the bodies. About five years ago the same vault was broken into and three bodies removed, but subsequently recovered.

THE POULTRY SHOW

The Exhibition To Take Place on January 21, 22 and 23

The annual exhibition of the Poultry Association, which will be held in the Market Hall on the 21st, 22nd and 23rd instant, promises to be a great success, the indefatigable secretary, has made arrangements to have two addresses delivered during the exhibition, by Mr. B. A. Silverwood, of Lindsay, who is an expert on the subject of poultry raising. The first lecture will be delivered on the evening of the 21st (opening night), and will deal with the purchasing of fowl, while the second address will be mostly for poultry raisers, and will be delivered at two o'clock on the afternoon of the following day. This will be a great drawing card, and Mr. Collins deserves much praise for the innovation.

The Association has joined the Agricultural Society in the purchase of the coops from the Lambton Association, which has become defunct. These are expected to arrive to-day.

Mr. R. H. Leary, the energetic President, says that present appearances indicate the most successful poultry show ever held in Peterborough.

Deafness is Curable!

Sufferers from impaired hearing will be glad to know that their affliction is probably not due to any organic defect in the ear, but results probably from a thickening of the lining of the middle ear caused by catarrhal inflammation. Hundreds of perfect recoveries as a result of the inhalation of Catarrhozone are reported, and on the highest authority we recommend this treatment to our readers. Catarrhozone quickly restores lost hearing, and its efficiency is placed beyond dispute by the case of Mr. Pozall of St. Thomas, who recovered perfect hearing by using Catarrhozone, after [illegible] years of deafness. Price $1. At Druggists or by mail, from Polson & Co, Kingston, Ont.

PRESENTED WITH AN ADDRESS

Ven. Archdeacon Casey Presented With an Address on Thursday

The departure of Ven. Archdeacon Casey from town will leave a vacancy in the community that will not readily be filled. For some time past he has been the capable and energetic Local Superintendent in the Separate Schools, and on Thursday night a number of the school board and others, waited on Rev. Father Casey and presented him with an address, expressing their regrets at his departure from the parish and at the same congratulating him on his appointment to a new parish.

Father Casey made a most expressive reply in appreciation of the kind words in the address. The relations which existed between him and the Board had been always of the most cordial nature and he regretted the parting from them. He would always watch with deep interest the future of the Separate Schools in Peterborough, and doubted not that under the able direction of the Board the Educational interests would suffer no neglect.

Paine's Celery Compound

Strengthening and Health-Giving is the Best Mid-Winter Medicine.

This Is The Season When the System Should be Fortified and the Blood Made Pure.

At this time when thousands are confined for hours each day and night in badly ventilated houses, offices, stores and workshops, the system should be fortified and the blood thoroughly cleansed so that disease may be successfully resisted.

Paine's Celery Compound is the best midwinter medicine for all ailing, weak and run-down men and women. It is the world's great disease banisher and system builder. It quickly furnishes nutriment for the innumerable nerve fibres; it arouses the organs of digestion to brisker action; it enables the wasted body to build up flesh and muscle, and dissipates the seeds of deadly disease. To all who have sallow faces, hollow cheeks and sunken eyes, betokening ill health, we say use Paine's Celery Compound and you will find a new and happier existence. New blood, fresh vim, energy and activity gained in January and February will give you a solid foundation of health for the coming spring time. Mrs. Hepper, Thornhill, Ont., says:

"With very great pleasure and satisfaction I wish to add my testimony to what has already been said in favor of Paine's Celery Compound. For a very long time I suffered from general debility and run-down system. Having heard of Paine's Celery Compound, I determined to give it a trial, and I am happy to say it has done for me more good than I can express. For ten years I doctored with other medicines without any good results: but, after using Paine's Celery Compound, I am perfectly restored to health, can eat well, digestion is good, and my sleep is sweet and sound. Altogether I am a new woman. I always recommend Paine's Celery Compound to my friends."

THE COMING SESSION TO BE VERY LIVELY

Violent Scenes Expected when Parliament Meets

IRISH QUESTION TOPMOST

Even the Boer War Will Now Take a Second Place.

The Government Determined to Stamp Out Obstruction by Irish Members, and Conduct the War to a Finish at the Same Time.

London, Jan. 11.

The coming session of Parliament promises to be an exciting one. The Government is determined to stamp out all obstruction from Irish members, and will present a measure dealing with the matter.

All sources of taxation have not been exhausted. On the contrary, the determination of the people of England to see this war settled is greater than ever, and, though the admixture of the Irish question with the Boer question may exasperate the disputants, and may even retard victory, it will not prevent it. The Boer war has cleared the air for many things. Amongothers it has taught the electors to see the Irish question in a new light. They are beginning to perceive that the presence in the House of Commons of the avowed enemies of their country and of the Empire is an anomaly. The election of Colonel Lynch for Galway, therefore, is regarded with satisfaction by those who wish to see Parliamentary institutions rescued from the confusion and impotence into which they have fallen.

In one sense, the Irish question and the Boer question are the same. That is to say: Who is to sit in front? It is unfortunate that this contest should continue, but it can only end by the surrender of England, and England will not accept a position of inferiority, while at the same time she offers to both the Irish and Boers absolute equality.

There is reason to believe that violent scenes will take place early in the session, and that the Irish members will renew their endeavor to make Parliament contemptible in the eyes of the public. Measures, however, are now being concerted for dealing with the difficulty. It is understood that the present and late Speakers, Mr. Gully and Viscount Peel, have conferred upon the means best adapted for dealing with the situation. It would be a great mistake to imagine that the United Kingdom has exhausted the resources of civilization, to use Mr. Gladstone's words, although it may be admitted that the Irish question is now entering upon a new phase. The willingness of the taxpayers of England and Scotland to prop up the question of the Irish landowners is questionable. There is too much feeling among the plain people on this side of St. George's Channel as to the tyranny of the legal proprietors of the land to make it possible for any Government to introduce a great purchase bill for the benefit of absentee Irish landlords. That is what is aimed at by a certain school of Unionists, but it is pre-destined to failure.

Everything points to the prominence of the Irish question in the coming session. The identification of the Irish Nationalists and pro-Boerism is worked for all it is worth on both sides of the Atlantic. Mr. Bourke Cochran's speech at Chicago early this month has attracted a good deal of attention, and is the subject of an interesting letter from the Washington correspondent of the Times. Mr. Bourke Cockran is well known and much liked in London circles, where his opinions find no sympathizers, but his great abilities, wit and remarkable anecdotal resources have given him the position which was once occupied by Senator Chauncey Depew. According to the Times correspondent, Mr. Bourke Cockran says that "today the burghers could secure almost any terms short of complete and explicit acknowledgment of their independence." He added: "If their resistance be prolonged for a few months the abandonment of the struggle to subdue them by Great Britain is inevitable." The American public really should not be misled by statements like these. Great Britain is not at the end of her resources.

CAREFUL AND EXPERIENCED HOUSEKEEPERS MUST HAVE THE DIAMOND DYES

Notwithstanding the efforts of substituters, careful and experienced housekeepers insist upon having the Diamond Dyes for home use. Mrs. H. Birtz, Winnipeg, Man., says:—"Diamond Dyes have been our friends for many years. I have dyed dresses for myself and suits for the children, and have saved considerable money which we have used for other purposes. I find the Diamond Dyes give perfect colors; they are easy to use, and when the directions are observed there is no failure or poor work. I have tried other dyes, but the Diamond Dyes are first and best."

Rags yarns and pieces of flannel and cloth when colored by the Diamond Dyes will make up pretty mats and rugs. Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns are sent free to any address. The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain Street, Montreal, P. Q.

Peterboro Loses to Lindsay

The senior hockey team of town journeyed to Lindsay yesterday to try conclusions with the team of that place. The match was closely contested, and was very interesting. The teams were well matched as the score indicates. The Peterborough team was made up as follows: Goal, Comstock; point, Glover; cover point, Armstrong; forwards, Whitcroft, Morgan, Lynch and Watt. At half time the score was 2-2, and at the finish 5-4, in favor of Lindsay.

TAKING PRECAUTIONS

Public Vaccination Decided Upon in Ashburnham on Thursday Evening

A joint meeting of the Ashburnham Council and Board of Health and School Board, was held in the village on Thursday evening.

Those present were, — Messrs. F. Adams, J. H. Smith, Pollock, Sheridan, Johnston, McCarthy, Wright, E. A. Peck and R. D. Rogers.

The meeting was called for the purpose of discussing what methods should be adopted to prevent small-pox from breaking out in the village.

As a result of the discussion the following resolution was carried,—

Moved by Mr. Johnston, seconded by Mr. Sheridan, — That arrangements be made with Dr. Amys to vaccinate all resident ratepayers of the village of Ashburnham, who may come to him for that purpose, and pay the fee of 25c., and the clerk be authorized to procure a supply of vaccine points; the doctor to keep a record of those vaccinated and to grant a certificate to each one. All poor persons resident in the village on presenting a certificate signed by any two members of the Charity Committee will be paid for by the municipality.

Dr. Amys will be at the Ashburnham Council Chamber this afternoon and on Monday between the hours of four and five o'clock, and on Saturday between three and four o'clock. A nurse will be present to assist. Dr. Amys will also vaccinate those calling at his surgery during office hours 9 to 11 a.m., 2 to 4 p.m., and 7 to 9 p.m.

LAID AT REST

Funeral of the Late J.H. Roper Was Largely Attended

The funeral of the late J. H. Roper took place yesterday from the residence of the Misses Kingan, Brock st., and was largely attended.

Rev. Dr. Torrance conducted the funeral services, which were very impressive. The late Mr. Roper was a staunch Presbyterian and a constant attendant at St. Paul's church. Many beautiful floral tributes were laid on the coffin by the many friends of the deceased, as a mark of esteem in which he was held.

The pall bearers were Messrs. Percy, Alfred and Ernest, sons of the deceased, and Mr. Edward Roper, brother, and Messrs. R. H. and Thos. Fortye.

BUILT A MONUMENT.

The Best Sort in the World.

"A monument built by and from Postum," is the way Mr. J. G. Casey of Ayers, Ill. describes himself. He says, "For years I was a coffee drinker until at last I became a terrible sufferer from dyspepsia, constipation, headaches and indigestion, and was a physical wreck. The different kinds of medicines I tried did not cure me, but finally some one told me I must leave off coffee and take up Postum Food Coffee. I was fortunate in having the new coffee made strictly according to directions, so that, from the start, I liked it. It has a rich flavor and I made the change from coffee to Postum without any trouble.

Gradually my condition changed. The old troubles disappeared and I began to get well again. My appetite became good and I could digest food. Now I have been restored to strength and health. Can sleep sound all night and awake with a fresh and rested body. Everyone who meets me comments on my getting so fat and rosy.

I am really a monument built by Postum, for I was a physical wreck, distressed in body and mind, and am now a strong, healthy man. I know what made the change, it was leaving off coffee and using Postum.

SOUTH AFRICAN STOCK

A Comparatively New Field of Investment for Peterborough Capitalists

In today's issue will be found an advertisement of Messrs. Parker & Co., stock brokers, of Toronto who have recently made arrangements with a large London Eng., house to handle all South African stocks, either for cash or on margin. They are prepared to furnish daily quotations by cable from London, and can furnish information regarding any of the stocks.

So far as we know they are the only Canadian firm of brokers to make a specialty of South African stocks, and we understand that while only a short time has elapsed since completing arrangements to handle these shares, the results so far have exceeded their expectations, which would seem to indicate that the public is not averse to purchasing mining stocks provided there is a free market for them, such as London affords.

A number of the South African companies have already resumed operations, and as others are preparing to follow their example, we consider Messrs. Parker & Co., have chosen a most opportune time in bringing this new departure before the notice of the investor.

CASTRO DEFIES KAISER WAR NOW PROBABLY

Startling Announcement Made Concerning Venezuela and Germany

GERMANY WILL ACT WITH GREAT CAUTION

The Report Not Credited by Leading American Newspapers—President of Republic Harasses Herr Knoop in Caracas

Willemstad, Island of Curacao, Jan. 11.—The government of President Castro of Venezuela has caused the following notice to be published in the journals devoted to its interests:

"Mr. Long has given formal and energetic instructions to the rear admiral of the United States north Atlantic squadron to watch the movements of the imperial German fleet, which is lying off the Venezuelan coast, and to offer resistance by force if necessary if the said fleet in any way threatens Venezuelan territory."

The mass of the people and the commercial body in Venezuela do not believe there is any truth in the announcement.

The German-Venezuelan quarrel increases in bitterness and the Venezuelan government has informed the board of directors (at Berlin) of the German railroad in Venezuela that their manager at Caracas, Herr Knoop, is no longer persona grata to the Venezuelan government, and has begged that another manager be immediately appointed.

HERR KNOOP NON PERSONA GRATA.

Herr Knoop is accused of refusing to transport the president's troops without a document recognizing the Venezuelan government to be responsible for any injury or loss arising out of revolutionary attacks on the railroad. Another reason alleged by the government is that Herr Knoop insisted on the company being paid for each transport of troops, as the government already owed the company more than $100,000.

President Castro also has used threats has accused Herr Knoop of favoring the revolution, has suspended all traffic on the line and has threatened to expel the manager from the country.

The company has protested and the German legation has sent a note to the government holding it responsible for any loss occasioned by the suspension of traffic on the road.

The lawyers who have been consulted hold that the company is within its strict rights. It would seem that the government intends to reestablish the service of the line, using the troops to do so.

Berlin, Jan. 11.—The attention of the German foreign office has been directed to the recurrence of stories to the effect that Germany is about to send an ultimatum to Venezuela. The foreign office announces that a reply from President Castro of Venezuela to the note handed him Jan. 2 by the German charge d'affaire at Caracas (Herr Von Tilgrim Baltazzi) has not yet been received; that Germany will give Castro a reasonable time in which to answer and that she has no disposition unduly to press the president of Venezuela.

It is reported here that the French government is sounding Washington as to the attitude of the United States in the event of France's coercing Venezuela into paying the French claims against that republic.

ANOTHER S. A. REPUBLIC BURSTS INTO ERUPTION

Collision Occurs in the Chamber of Deputies and a Senator is Slain

Buenos Ayres, Jan. 10.— Another of those continually smouldering volcanoes—yclept the South American Republics—has burst into active eruption. The rumors of a revolution in the Republic of Paraguay turn out to be well founded. The revolt, which broke out at Asuncion, the capital, was caused by the question of the Presidential succession, the term of President Aceval expiring in November of this year.

The revolutionary Junta was composed of General Caballero, General Escobar, Colonel J. A. Escurra, the Minister of War; Senor Marro, a Cabinet Minister; and Senator Freitas.

President Aceval resigned the Presidency and Congress accepted his resignation.

A collision occurred in the Chamber of Deputies, during which Senator Facundo Insfran, president of the Hygienic Council, was killed, and General Caballero, Senators Miguel and Corbalan, and Deputy Fernando Carreras were severely wounded.

Week of Prayer

The closing meeting of the week's devotions was held in the Murray St. Baptist church last night. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Bastow, presided, and after prayer, read the scriptural lesson appointed for the evening, a portion of the 6th chapter of the Epistle to the Ephesians. When a duet had been rendered, Rev J. P. Wilson addressed the meeting on the topic of the evening, "The Family and the School." The address was brief in order that more time might be devoted to the devotional exercises of the evening. We are here to pray for families all over the world. Some of our families are at home, some are far away, but we can pray for them all. The family is the oldest institution in the world, founded by God himself. It is older than the patriarchs, older than the apostles, older than the prophets; yet it has stood through all the ages and through all states of civilization. The family is more than the state, and may even be said to be more than the church, for when states are overthrown, and when churches have become scattered, the family remains. It is the hope of our race, the hope of our nation; for the character of the family becomes the character of the nation. All reformations begin in the family, just as all charity begins at home. In Col. 3, Paul shows us a family in which are six persons. There is the spirit of forbearance, forgetfulness as of Christ, a spirit of charity and of love in this perfect Christian household. A nation of such families would be a perfect nation. The wife must obey her husband, not because he is any better or any greater, but because every perfect institution must of necessity, have a head, and no woman should marry a man whom she cannot respect and love. Husbands are to love their wives, to sacrifice anything which is necessary to their welfare and happiness. If the spiritual atmosphere pervades, the child will obey his parents, but parents must not criticise their children too severely, aggravating them, and then punish them for their anger. Servants, obey your masters, having all respect; and masters, be just and equal with your servants. Some people treat their dog with more consideration than they do their servant. The spirit dominating in the household should be that of religion; the church in the house is a grand ideal.—"As for me and my house we will serve God. The family altar, instituted by the old church, must be maintained. We are living at a rapid rate; the old leisurely way of running things is gone forever, and now everything is run by much hurry, which commences at 7 o'clock in the morning, so that every member of the ordinary family who is above school age must be away from home shortly after 6 a.m. As soon as the evening meal is past, the younger ones go out for recreation and do not meet until the next morning. In this way family prayer is being crowded out of the home. The picture in the "Cotter's Saturday Night," is not paralleled in our land to-day. The speaker once saw a cavalry officer defending himself with a sword against two opponents, who were unable to reach him with a single blow. So Christ, in his great temptation, had His defence in the Sword of the Spirit; and one of the most beautiful of Scripture thoughts was that He learned its teachings at His mother's knee. The Jewish mother was very careful to inculcate in her child the lessons contained in the sacred Word. A college president in looking over the records of 40 years found that hundreds of Jews and Jewesses had passed through the institution, but that never had a single one been disciplined. He also found that in the state prison where about 800 prisoners were confined, not a Jew or a Jewess was to be found. We must strive for the time, disposition and courage to have family worship. If there is irreverence in the home, there is no family prayer. Our schools should be guarded most carefully; the same atmosphere of right and wrong should exist in the school as in the home.

The meeting closed by the singing of "God be With You Till we Meet Again."

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING.

THE USE OF Malt Breakfast Food. ADDS TO THE COMFORTS OF HOME LIFE.

Good housekeeping is only successful and brought to the point of true happiness when the individual members of the family are properly and healthfully nourished by food prepared from day to day.

Good housekeeping demands that the morning meal should be commenced with Malt Breakfast Food, delicious, appetizing and strengthening. No other grain food can so well furnish energy and vigor for the day's work. Young and old love Malt Breakfast Food. It is partially predigested during its manufacture; it contains no insoluble starch, therefore it is easily digested and quickly assimilated, and agrees perfectly with the weakest stomach. Malt Breakfast Food is the only grain food that truly builds up flesh, bone and muscle; it keeps the young and old vigorous and strong. Ask your Grocer for it.

Curious Bits of News.

Dr. G. L. Johnson, whose studies of the eyes of mammals have recently been published, calls attention to the fact that men and monkeys alone possess parallel and convergent vision of the two eyes. On the other hand, the lower mammals possess divergent and consequently very widely extended vision. Squirrels, for instance, and probably hares and rabbits as well, are able to see an enemy approaching directly from behind without turning the head.

It is not surprising that more people live to be over 100 years old in warm climates than in the higher latitudes. The German Empire, with 55,000,000 inhabitants, has 778 cent-narians. France, with 40,000,000, has 213. England has only 146, and Scotland 46. Sweden has 10, Norway 23, Belgium 5, Denmark 2, Spain 401, and Switzerland none. Servia, with a population of 2,250,000, has 575 people over 100 years old. It is claimed that the oldest living person, one Bruno Cotrim, living in Rio de Janeiro, is 150 years old.

Ever since the Forth bridge was opened—eleven years ago—painting has gone on continuously, according to the "Mechanical Engineer." "Beginning at the south end, the workmen take three years to cover the entire length of the bridge, and, as three years represents approximately the life of the paint, no sooner are they finished than the men have to begin again. In this way every square inch of steel comes under observation at least once in three years. The staff of men employed varies in number from the maximum of 25."

In comparison with the English tongue, foreign tongues seem parsimonious in some ways of expression and wasteful in others. For instance, it is impossible to "kick" a man in French. You must give him a "blow with the foot." The Portuguese do not "wink" at one; they "close and open the eyes." In the languages of the American Indians there is no word with which to convey the idea of "stealing," perhaps because the idea of property is so vague. It is related of one of the early missionaries that, in attempting to translate the Bible into Algonkin, he could find no word to express "love," and was compelled to invent it.

The first thing that strikes a landsman on a man-of-war is the rigid discipline observed everywhere. On some of the ships belonging to the tropical countries, however, discipline is very lax. The "Defense," a Haytian man-of-war, was lying in the harbor of Port au Prince. One day a mess cook, for some reason, cleaned about a peck of knives and forks on the gun-deck, and, being suddenly called away, and not wishing to spend time to go to the galley, he seized the mess-pot full of knives and forks and stuck it in the muzzle of the ten-inch gun, putting the tampion in after it. About an hour afterward the admiral came aboard, and as the gun was loaded with blank cartridge, they used it to fire a salute. It happened that the gun was aimed toward the town, and almost pointblank at the Grand Hotel. The guests assembled on the porch to witness the ceremonies, when they were saluted with a rain of knives and forks, which stuck against the wooden walls like quills on a porcupine. Fortunately no one was hurt, although there were many narrow escapes.

A Famous Necklace.

The famous pearl necklace of the Countess Castiglione, which has just been sold by auction to a French jewelry dealer for eighty-four thousand three hundred dollars, is one of the most beautiful things of its kind in existence. The piece consists of two hundred and seventy-nine pearls, which are threaded on five strings. Each string was put up separately and knocked down to different bids. Gruenberg of Paris succeeded in securing all of them, thus giving him possession of the beautiful necklace in its entirety. The countess was an eccentric character. To punish France for having become a republic she shut herself up in her house and never let the light of day shine on her, contenting herself with candles and gas. At the same time she abolished mirrors from her apartments, and thus spared herself the pain of looking at her face as it aged.

LIVES ON $1 A WEEK

Mr. Morse of Chicago, Ill., Says that is His Average Cost for Food.

William A. Morse, sixty-eight years old, retired mechanic, living at 181 West Madison street, Chicago, says that for the last five years the average cost of his food has been $1 a week, that he gets everything he needs for health and comfort; that his health was never better, and that he enjoys every day of his life.

Mr. Morse is alone in the world and "boards himself." He does not drink alcoholic liquors and spends no money for luxuries except tobacco, which he smokes moderately. For recreation he walks to the park, to the lake front or to church. He was a soldier of the Union in the civil war and has never been sick a whole day in his life. He cooks his frugal meals on an oil stove and wastes nothing. Coffee is the only stimulant in his bill of fare and he puts condensed milk into it. Tea is barred from his table, but he uses butter as his appetite directs.

In the week beginning Dec. 10 last his living expenses reached the minimum, the total cost of his food supplies having been 48 cents, itemized as follows:

Dec. 11—Bread, 2 cents; oil, 5 cents	.07
Dec. 12—Bread, 2 cents; sugar, 6 cents; oatmeal, 5 cents	.13
Dec. 13—Oil, 9 cents; milk, 9 cents	.18
Dec. 15—Oil, 5 cents; oatmeal, 3 cents	.08
Dec. 16—Bread, 2 cents	.02
Total	.48

His most extravagant week ended last Christmas eve, when his week's expenditures reached $1.21, his food purchases including holiday luxuries in the shape of cranberries, pork chops, pie, doughnuts and cake. Here is his expense account for that week:

Dec. 17—Sugar, 6 cents; oil, 5 cents	.11
Dec. 18—Oatmeal, 5 cents	.05
Dec. 19—Potatoes, 12 cents; oil, 10 cents	.22
Dec. 20—Bread, 3 cents; pie, 4 cents; doughnuts, 4 cents	.12
Dec. 21—Oil, 10 cents; coffee, 8 cents	.18
Dec. 22—Sugar, 6 cents, bread, 2 cents	.08
Dec. 23—Pork chops	.15
Dec. 24—Cranberries, 7 cents; doughnuts, 4 cents; cake, 5 cents; butter, 14 cents	.30
Total	$1.21

In proof of his claims Mr. Morse, who is a well-preserved, bright-eyed and cheerful man, exhibited a card of his culinary expenses for twenty weeks. He said:

"I have been boarding myself the last five years, and I like it better than most boarding-houses. I get all I want to eat of plain food and it agrees with my health. Dr. Harper is right. A healthy couple could live on $300 a year if they went about it in the right manner and with cheerful spirits. 'He who hath a merry heart hath a continual feast!'"

In the recent heat wave in Rome four swimmers made up a party at eleven o'clock in the morning and proceeded to take their breakfast in the Tiber. They appeared on the river bank, carrying a table loaded with dainties, pushed off, and had their meal without returning to the bank, and, what is more surprising, without touching the bottom.

A singular deed has been filed in Northumberland County, Pa. It is dated October 9, 1793. In a series of whereases it traces the ownership of the land conveyed from the Creator of the earth, who, "by parole and livery of seizin did enfeoff the parents of mankind, to wit, Adam and Eve, of all that certain tract of land called and known in the planetary system as the earth."

"Badly Crippled."

Rheumatism at its worst is a sort of living death. It chains a man to a chair or binds him to a bed, and metes out to him a daily martyrdom. At the best rheumatism is a painful malady, interfering alike with pleasure and business.

To cure rheumatism it is necessary to eliminate from the blood the acid poisons which are the cause of the disease. This is effectually done by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It carries out of the blood the corrupt and poisonous accumulations which breed and feed disease. It increases the activity of the blood-making glands and sends an increased supply of rich, pure blood through vein and artery to strengthen every organ of the body.

"I had been troubled with rheumatism for twelve years, so bad at times I could not leave my bed," writes Mr. R. J. McKnight, of Cades, Williamsburg Co., S. C. "I was badly crippled. Tried many doctors and two of them gave me up to die. None of them did me much good. The pains in my back, hips and legs (and at times in my head), would nearly kill me. My appetite was very bad. Everybody who saw me said I must die. I took five bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and four vials of 'Pellets,' and to-day my health is good after suffering twelve years with rheumatism."

Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are powerful aids to the cleansing of the clogged system. By all dealers in medicine.

A Birthday Party.

A number of friends and well wishers assembled at the handsome home of Mr. and Mrs. John Nugent, Brock street, on Tuesday evening, and were in quiet possession of the premises when their hosts returned for a church meeting. Mr. Jeffries, as spokesman, read an address to Mr. Nugent, which had been carefully prepared and contained flattering allusions to the popular host, wishing him continued good fortune and many, many happy returns of his birthday. The address was written with the largest sized pen, and was 27 feet long, more or less. It was accompanied by the sweetest token of regard we ever saw, in the shape of a walking stick. Mr. Nugent replied in felicitous terms, after which the party proceeded to enjoy themselves at [illegible].

Asthma Cure Free

Asthmalene Brings Instant Relief and Permanent Cure in All Cases,

Sent ABSOLUTELY FREE on receipt of postal. Write your name and address plainly.

CHAINED FOR TEN YEARS

EVERY [illegible] BRINGS RELIEF.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-size bottle."

DRS. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO.:

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows at 130th street, New York. I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the 1st of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully,

O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle and I am ever grateful. I have a family of four children and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

The wet bandage seemed to soothe the sick man.

"Poor chap!" the woman muttered again, as he grew quieter, and she went back to her seat. She gave a short sigh. If it weren't that times was so hard I'd cut off my 'and sooner nor let 'im go; but it's too much for us; we can't find bread for our children, and how are we to keep 'im?"

She sat, lost in thought, till an hour had gone, and at last voices and footsteps told her that her husband was returning.

"I've told this gentleman all about 'im, Maria," Jim said by way of introduction, and then the doctor, a keen-faced, middle-aged man, mounted the steps and entered the caravan.

In another moment he came back.

"There is acute inflammation of the brain; the poor fellow is in a desperate condition. I am amazed that he has existed all this time. How long ago, exactly, is it since you picked him up?"

"More nor three weeks, yer honor," and then Jim went over the whole story again, how he was travelling in Athshire, and one evening put up at a place called Fraser's Mine, near Ledstone, and just as he was fixing everything for the night he heard a groaning come from somewhere about the mouth of the pit, and having conquered his fright, he had leaned over the old shaft, and looking down with his lantern, had seen a man clinging with all his strength to a broad beam, part of the woodwork that had been built up near the top, and how he had shouted encouragement to the poor creature, and he and his wife had flung stout ropes over the edge, and by the greatest difficulty managed to drag the wretched man to the surface, where he had fallen down in a faint, and then had gone on growing worse and worse, until they feared that he could last no longer.

The doctor listened attentively.

"But why did you not carry him back to Ledstone? No doubt he is an inhabitant of the place; you would have saved yourself much trouble if you had done this."

"Well," confessed Jim, as he knocked the ashes out of his pipe, "it were like this: my missis and I both got the same notion into our 'eads as he were a cove as was a-hidin' for somethin', and so, d'ye see, sir——"

"So you thought you would give him a helping hand to escape?"

The physician smiled; then he turned and spoke to the nurse in a low voice, and then addressed Jim again.

"I will have him conveyed to the People's Hospital at once. It is lucky you came to me to-night, for there is such a run on the place by to-morrow the bed might have been filled. He will be well cared for there, and we can send and make inquiries at Ledstone. You must remain here, however, as it will be necessary for you to state the story to the parish authorities. Just give me a 'hand; we'll lift him into the ambulance cart; it will jolt him a bit, but I expect he has had some of that lately in the van."

A covered cart was drawn up in the lane, and into this the sick man was carried by Jim and the doctor, not without much trouble; then, with a parting admonition to Jim to come up to the village early the next morning, the cart started off at a slow, steady pace down the lane, now bathed in the red rays of the fast dying sun.

"It is a curious tale," mused the doctor to himself as he walked along by the side of the cart, while the nurse sat by the sick man and soothed him as best she could through the journey. "From the little I can see the poor fellow looks a gentleman; might be very young, too— for that white hair does not match his face. Well, I must do what I can for him, and perhaps in a few days he will be able to speak for himself; that is, if my theory about his belonging to Ledstone should prove to be incorrect."

The cart passed through the village, and stopped at a building that bore unmistakably its character and nature written in its walls. Above the doorway flashed a lamp, and by its swinging light might have been seen a square piece of white stone let into the wall, bearing an inscription engraved on it. The words of this inscription were as follows:—

"This hospital was erected by Squire Charles Hugh Mostyn, of Brexley Hall, Brexley village, in commemoration of the fifteenth birthday of his beloved and only child, Barbara Mostyn, and presented by the said squire Charles Hugh Mostyn, to the inhabitants of Brexley village as a gift."

Then followed the date, which told that the hospital was now about four to five years old, and beneath the date was inscribed an appropriate text.

The doctor, a kind-hearted man, whose interest and sympathy were keenly aroused by the unusual case brought thus suddenly under his notice, made every arrangement for the invalid's comfort, and himself helped to carry the now senseless form up to one of the private rooms set apart for extreme cases like this.

And so, while Lord Otway was searching in every direction; while Gordon Smythe, back in his old haunts, was endeavoring to stifle conscience and fear at one and the same time; while Lady Blanche Bellaira and the poor deformed Marian were waiting anxiously for news, and Katharine Brereton lay with wide, agonized eyes and beating brain, thinking— always thinking— of the same awful subject, Craven Adair, the cause of this search, this fear, this grief, and this hopeless despair, was carried into a shelter that was sustained by the indifferent charity of a very fortunate young woman by name Barbara Mostyn.

Such is the irony of fate!

CHAPTER IX.

The old proverb of man proposes and God disposes came true once again to Katharine. As she had lain— wretched, weak, and ill— in bed after that interview with Lord Otway, she had determined that, come what might, she would leave Northminster at once. The thought of seeing poor Marian Adair, being a witness to her grief, was more than she could bear, she said to herself passionately. She would return to Ledstone for a few days, and then— well, then! Katharine had no settled plans, only the rugged determination that henceforth she would call Lucy Smythe's house her home no longer. With her modest fifty pounds a year she could not starve, and she had brains and hands to make more.

All this she had settled in her mind, and was just on the point of telling Mrs. Smythe they must prepare to start for Ledstone the next day, when the latter rushed into her room, full of excitement.

"Oh, Katharine, love, I am afraid I must leave you and go home at once. I have just had a telegram from my darling; he has run down for a few days, and so, you see, I must go. You don't mind, dear, do you?"

How dare he, how could he go so close to the scene of his horrible cruelty, his crime! was the question that forced itself into her mind.

Mrs. Smythe repeated her eager words, and Katharine roused herself to answer.

"No, no! Go, dear, go!" she said hurriedly. "I am better! Don't think of me! Go!"

"Dear soul," said Miss Weston to Katharine, "how she loves that son of hers. It is to be hoped he is worthy of her great devotion!"

Katharine lay staring out at the twilight sky, and made no answer to this.

No tongue could tell the unutterable loathing, the dread, the horror she had for Gordon Smythe. She seemed debased in her own sight, inasmuch as she had permitted herself to become his wife and save him from a shameful death.

Miss Weston was a sensible soul; she saw at once what Mrs. Smythe had never seen, that Katharine was going through some mental crisis, and she pitied her accordingly.

"The girl is not happy," she would muse to herself. "I wish I could brush away those clouds from her face. I wish I could give her happiness."

She began chatting to Katharine in her most cheery way, telling all that had occurred at Lady Blanche's garden party, and then she drifted on to the loneliness of her life, and then she came and sat down beside the bed, and stroked Katharine's hand.

"If I had your sweet face always before me I should be grateful, indeed," she said, softly. "Katharine do you think you could be happy with me? I should not have said this my dear, had I not known that you are an orphan, and that were you to leave Mrs. Smythe's she still has her boy to fall back upon, but I have grown very fond of you, my child. I am rich, lonely old woman and if you care to make your home with me, why——"

Katharine carried the kind, withered hand to her lips suddenly, and kissed it, while two hot tears rolled down her cheeks and dropped on it.

"Dear, dear friend, if only I could say 'yes,' but I cannot," she said, with deep emotion.

How could she live beneath this roof, bearing such a secret as she did within her breast? How bring the taint of murder —of sin —in this pure, fresh home? Besides, she could not rest in Northminster; she must get away— miles away — from any chance of meeting Marian Adair, miles away from Ledstone and the horrible past.

She let Miss Weston see some of this eagerness in her next words, which dwelt on her determination to put an end to her hitherto lazy life, and to earn her living.

"Say no more dear; I understand," she said gently. "I understand you are not the girl to act on impulse without some very good reason. Perhaps some day it may be different, and you may care to come to me. Well, child, if by Heaven's will I am alive, the home is open to you then as it is now, and remember, whatever happens, I am your friend. Now, shall we have a chat about your future? Tell me just as much as you like, and I may be able to help you. No, don't thank me," as Katharine broke in with quivering lips. "I think on the whole your determination to work is a good one; it will benefit your mental condition. I know that well, for years ago a great trouble fell on me. I was not a rich woman then, Katharine, being in fact a nursery governess, but I always look back to my hard work as to the very best friend I ever had."

And then, after that they sat talking quietly for another hour, and the result of this long chat was that a week later, when Lucy Smythe was thinking of preparing Katharine's room for the girl to return, and sighing a little wearily over Gordon's terrible extravagance, a letter came from Katharine —a long, sweet, affectionate letter — in which Mrs. Smythe learned that she had lost a daughter, and that henceforth Katharine would live apart, earning her livelihood in a strange world. The little woman was deeply grieved, and resolved not to give Katharine up without a struggle; but fortunately for our heroine's plans, and unfortunately for Mrs. Smythe, she was plunged into such trouble by Gordon's constant demands for money that the struggle never took place beyond a long letter full of loving reproaches and affectionate entreaties to return.

But Katharine's resolve was taken and despite a qualm of pity that passed through her mind, she did not give way. She left Northminster for London one afternoon, bearing in her pocket a note which Miss Weston had given her to carry to an old friend, who would assist her all she could, and a purse whose scanty store had been replenished unknown to her by a bank-note slipped in by the generous old maid's hand.

And so, though she limped still, and was scarcely more than convalescent, Katharine turned her back on the past with a prayer and a hope that forgetfulness, if not happiness, might come in the future.

* * *

On her arrival in London, Katharine took a cab, and drove to some lodgings to which Miss Weston had directed her, and fortunately was able to engage a bedroom at a modest sum. She fell asleep that night for the first time during the weeks that had gone with a sensation of freedom that was almost akin to pleasure, and slept soundly until the next morning.

Then taking another hansom she started to go first to the lawyer who paid her her modest income, to communicate her intentions to him, and, secondly, to this Mrs. Graham, Miss Weston's friend.

Her lawyer, she discovered, was out of town on his annual holiday, but the old lady was at home, and very charming Katharine found her. Having read Miss Weston's letter, she at once directed the girl to go to a certain house not far away, where that very morning, a Lady Drummond was making a choice of a companion for her niece, a very wealthy young lady — an orphan.

The advantages of this engagement were manifold, but Katharine never expected that she had for a single instant a chance of obtaining it when she was ushered into Lady Drummond's boudoir. What little change the current of our lives. Just as Katharine entered the room a small picture fell off an easel close at hand, and the girl stooped to pick it up. As she did so she uttered an exclamation of mingled surprise, delight and pain.

"Is it injured?" asked Lady Drummond, a rather plain, fussy woman, with a not unpleasant expression. "I hope not, as I value it very much, indeed."

Tears had started to Katharine's eyes.

"No, it is unhurt," she replied, speaking with difficulty; she was gazing at the canvas through a mist of tears— what memories it awoke! "Forgive me," she faltered, simply "my father painted this picture, and——"

"Your father? Your name is Brereton," exclaimed Lady Drummond, jumping up from her chair "My dear, why did you not say so footmen always mumble out names nowadays. Your father did me the greatest service any man could do, he saved my child's life. Did you never hear of the time he jumped over the quay at Lisbon and rescued a boy from drowning?"

"My father never spoke of it, and I do not recall the incident; it must have been when I was a baby."

"Ah! just like him, just like him! —a brave, noble fellow. He made so light of it then, and yet he nearly sacrificed his own life."

"Years after he sent me that picture, and you see how I treasure it. And so you are his child, and you want to go out as a companion? How is that?— no money? Dear, dear! and such a genius as he was! Of course, you can do everything— sing, play, paint, etcetera? If you knew the trouble I have had about this companion! Barbara is peculiar in her views. Barbara is my niece, you know, the young lady who would require you. 'Please get me some one bright and pleasant, nice-looking, if possible, and able to attend to my charities; I will not have an old woman, Aunt Ellen.' Now," determined Lady Drummond, putting down the letter she had picked up from her writing table, "you are the very person. The salary will be a hundred a year, and I assure you, if you just know how to manage Barbara, you will have a very pleasant time. She is always travelling about, and is very rarely at home, although Brexley Hall is a lovely place. She has her chaperon, of course, but she wants a companion as well, and you are the exact thing."

"But," began Katharine hurriedly— this off-hand arrangement startled her very much— as Lady Drummond declared this vigorously, "would you not like some references? My solicitor——"

"No, no, no! You are Robert Brereton's daughter, that is enough for me, and your face is sufficient reference. Now, when can you go? At once? Good! You must start for Brexley Hall to-morrow some time. Barbara writes me she shall be there for her birthday, which falls on August the third, and is always celebrated with much fuss and excitement. And now come and have some luncheon. Thank goodness, I have arranged a tiresome job in a most delightful way. I must write and thank Mrs. Graham for sending you to me. Just fancy you being Robert Brereton's child! Look, there is the portrait of the boy whom your father saved. Ah, ah! not much of a boy is he now?" and Lady Drummond's little brown eyes glistened as she gazed at her tall, good-looking son's picture taken in his uniform as a naval officer. "Such a good fellow, my dear, the best son mother ever had; and this is Barbara. Oh, she is very pretty, but she looks bad tempered enough there." Lady Drummond shook her head as she handed Katharine a panel photograph. "Barbara has the true Mostyn temper," she said. "She takes after her father. Do you like her face?"

"She must certainly be pretty, but it is hard to judge in a photograph; the coloring is always lost, and that invariably makes such a difference."

Lady Drummond gave her a sharp glance.

"Now, I like her for that," she mentally opined; "if she had been insincere she would have gushed over Barbara's portrait. How I do like a straightforward, honest person! I hope she will get on with Barbara."

Which thought, following on the above statement, would have sounded strange had it been uttered aloud.

"Here is a face worth looking at," she said, as she put Katharine forcibly into a chair, and then went across to a table and picked up a portrait. "As you are going to be with Barbara, you are sure to meet him; and if you don't agree with me and declare him to be an angel in human form, then I am very much mistaken. I am sure I only hope Baba may be fortunate enough to get him for her husband; they tell me he is very much in love with her, and she might search the world over before she found such another. When you have looked at that well, you must eat some cold beef. Your cheeks are very pale, my child, and I will give you a few hints about the duties you will have in your new life, and about Barbara, while you eat. I like to be well up in people and things before I go anywhere, don't you?"

"Yes," murmured Katharine, mechanically.

Her cheeks had grown pale, and there was a sudden weariness in her beautiful eyes. She had heard Lady Drummond's voice only dimly, for she was wondering vaguely why her heart should suddenly start aching in that dull, painful way, and what on earth it mattered to her whom Ormande, Lord Otway should marry.

CHAPTER X.

It was past four o'clock before Lady Drummond would let Katharine go, and then she did so with apparent reluctance.

"Brexley air will do you good; plenty of milk and eggs is what you want, my dear. I shan't know you when I see you again. I am glad you will have a few days to yourself before Barbara joins you, as you can rest and lounge as much as you like. After that I expect she will keep you busy with her charities."

There was just the faintest sneer lingering round Lady Drummond's upper lip as she spoke the last word.

"You know Brexley is a model place," she went on; "one is supposed to be able to live in the drains themselves, they are so sanitarily perfect; but between you and me, my dear, though I adore the old Hall, and like the village, I could live upon [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] I [illegible] [illegible] to wait [illegible] [illegible] I can't drive you home, so I give [illegible] appointment. [illegible] you [illegible] rest well this evening; you look worn out now! I shall see you early to-morrow."

Katharine breathed a short, quick sigh when she was once more in the street. She felt as if she were in a dream, the events of the day had been so strange and unexpected. It was difficult to realize that her future was settled so easily and quickly; she had anticipated having to wait weeks, perhaps months, before she obtained employment.

A Naval Battle on Horseback.

GENERAL PAEZ was the first president of the republic of Venezuela, and to him perhaps, more than to any other man, with the exception of Simon Bolivar, Venezuela owes her independence. Paez was a llanero—cowboy —on the llanos or plains of the Orinoco, and at the age of eighteen was superintendent of a large cattle estate. One of the most remarkable incidents of modern warfare, in which Paez played the principal part, is chronicled in Mr. W. E. Curtis's book on Venezuela.

General Paez is the only man who ever fought a naval battle on horseback. With his cavalry he actually attacked and captured a fleet of ships.

While Bolivar was trying to cross the Apure River with his army, during the struggle for independence, he was prevented by a half-dozen or more of Spanish gunboats, which anchored in the stream and moved up and down as he did.

"I would give the world to have possession of that flotilla," exclaimed he to Paez, who had then risen to be second in command, "for I can never cross the river as long as it is there! If it belonged to us, instead of to the enemy, the crossing would be an easy matter."

"I will have those flecheras (ships) or die!" exclaimed Paez; and, calling upon his llaneros—his regiment of cowboys—he said: "Let those follow Tio who dare!"

"Tio" was the pet name by which Paez was known among his reckless followers, but he never used it himself except in an emergency.

He spurred his stallion into the stream, followed by three thousand llaneros, and their horses, which are taught to swim as well as to gallop carried them directly to the gunboats.

It was night. The Spanish fleet was taken entirely unawares. The llaneros clambered from their saddles to the decks of the vessels, and then let their horses swim back to shore. Thus, after cutting off their own retreat, it was a question of win or die. They fought desperately, and every vessel was captured.

VARICOCELE AND STRICTURE

We guarantee the Latest Method Treatment discovered by Dr. Goldberg to be a permanent and positive cure for Varicocele and Stricture without cutting, stretching or loss of time. In Varicocele it absorbs the bunching or wormy condition, equalizes circulation; it at once stops Pain in the groins, also stops all drains, thereby giving the organs their proper nutrition, consequently vitalizes the parts and restores lost powers. In Stricture it absorbs the tissue, stops smarting sensation, nervousness, weakness, backache, etc., while in all prostatic troubles it is the treatment par excellence. So positive are we that our Latest Method Treatment will cure you that you can

PAY WHEN CURED

You need pay nothing until you are convinced that a thorough and complete cure has been established. It makes no difference who has failed to cure you, call and see us, as we will give you a thorough examination free of charge and it may be the means of saving you years of suffering.

Each time you call you see Dr. Goldberg personally

He has 12 diplomas, certificates, etc., which testify to his standing and abilities. The number of years we have been established in Detroit and the cures we effected have ranked us the foremost specialists of the country. We can give no stronger guarantee of our abilities to cure you than the fact that you need pay nothing until cured.

OUR LATEST METHOD TREATMENT GUARANTEED TO CURE

Varicocele and Stricture without cutting, stretching or loss of time. Also Blood Poison, Chronic, Private, Nervous, Impotency, Kidney, Liver, Bladder, Stomach, Female and Rectal Troubles. Don't Allow Operation for Cancer

There is a simpler, safer and more effective Method of Treatment.

Dr. J. C. Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U.S.A., in a paper he read before the Ohio State Medical Society, May 1893, said: "I have operated in a considerable number of cases of Cancer recently, and with one exception all have died within fourteen months after the operation."

This statement of a prominent Surgeon, should make any one suffering from cancer, hesitate before submitting to operation and consider carefully the evidence offered on behalf of the new Constitutional remedy, which cures Cancers, Tumors and all malignant growths, without the necessity of operation. It is a simple vegetable medicine that searches out and destroys the cancer growths, completely eradicates the disease, and at the same time, builds up and invigorates the system.

Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., will be pleased to send full particulars of this treatment, in a plain, sealed wrapper.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

—How's your arm?

—There was no police court yesterday.

—The County Council will meet on the 28th inst.

—The first meeting of the new Town Council will take place on Monday.

—Some of the machinery for the Canadian Cordage Co. will arrive next week.

—Lindsay is pushing the sugar beet enterprise, with a view to the establishment of a factory in that town.

—Bandmaster Gideon will lead the orchestra in the George Street Methodist Sunday School, to-morrow.

—Mr. R. M. Roy photographed the Peterborough Rugby Club on Saturday last, and has secured an excellent picture.

—An engine left the track yesterday, on Hunter street, near the cereal works, and had to be "jacked" back on to the rails again.

—The Times suggests the names of Messrs. G. W. Hatton, R. B. Moore, and Dr. Boucher as water commissioners.

—There is considerable wood being offered for sale just now on the market. The price, however, still keeps around the $5 figure per cord.

—Mr. John Stuart came into The Times office yesterday and paid his subscription for the 27th time. He says that all the people in the back country read The Times.

TO CURE A COLD IN ONE DAY

Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. Grove's signature is on each box. 25c

—Amateur poetry and anonymous communications will not receive attention in this column unless accompanied by a draft for three months subscription to The Times—not for publication, but as evidence of good faith.

—At St. Luke's entertainment on Wednesday evening, the bible class presented their teacher, Mr. J. J. Turner, jr., with a beautiful easy chair, and to Mrs. J. J. Turner, jr., a beautiful fern. Mr. D. Spence received a writing desk bound in seal leather from the Rector, officers and teachers of St. Luke's Sunday school.

We desire to draw the attention of our readers to H. Le Brun & Co's. moving sale announcement in another part of our paper. This well known firm are leaving the premises at present occupied by them and are selling off their entire stock of high-grade ready and tailor made clothing. The entire stock must go, and prices are cut in two. This will be a good opportunity to secure first class goods at a greatly reduced price.

Stock of T. O. Bush Co. Sold

The T. O. Bush Company stock was sold yesterday by auctioneer John Haggart to Mr. H. LeBrun at 64 1-2 cents on the dollar.

The bidding at the sale was very brisk there being a number of buyers and manufacturers present. The entire stock will be cleared off at greatly reduced prices.

Officers Fire Department

On Tuesday, the annual election of officers, of the Peterborough Fire Department, was held in the Firemens Rooms and resulted as follows:—

Captain,—J. M. Haggart.
1st Lieut,—W. R. Turner.
2nd Lieut.—A. Moore.
Secy.—J. M. Metheral.
Treas.—J. Gibbs.

Ordained to Priesthood

His Grace Archbishop O'Connor ordained to the priesthood recently at St. Basils church, Mr. Neil McNulty, formerly of Peterborough. Father McNulty will remain at St. Basils for the present. On the same occasion, Mr. Vincent Murphy, of Toronto, took his final vow as a member of the Basilican Community.

A Perfect Coal Stove

A few days ago The Times purchased from Mr. Cyrille Wilhelmy of the City Hotel, local agent for the manufacturer, a No. 3 "Star" coal stove and have it in use in our composing room. We cannot speak too highly of the stove. It is a perfect heater and a real coal saver. The entire flat is heated by this stove, with one-half the fuel, that is used in any ordinary coal stove. A very noticeable feature of this stove is the entire absence of coal gas in the room. We consider it the best coal heater on the market, and would not be without it.

EAST RIDING ELECTION

A Few Plain Words From The Times

THE PROHIBITION QUESTION

How the Candidates Stand on the Matter of Prohibition

The Game of Politics is One That Even Preachers Indulge in at Times—Are the Advocates of Prohibition Weakening?

Dr. Ford, the Conservative candidate in the East Riding is, it is understood, a strong temperance advocate. So far Mr. Anderson has declined to commit himself, with holding his statement of opinion in the matter, out of respect, doubtless, to the feelings of the Government. That Mr. Ross is not a prohibitionist must be pretty well apparent, even without reading between the lines. That there are "mixed feelings" in the Cabinet everybody knows. It will be decidedly interesting, therefore, to watch the "trend of events." The alacrity shown by certain ministers of religion to excuse hesitaincy and to palliate vacillation is also a sign of the times. Are the advocates of prohibition weakening? It looks like it, in view of the wobbling tendency of these gentlemen who on Sunday dabble in religion, but during the week prefer politics. However, we hope that nothing hasty will be done to the lasting injury of the Province, for if the ranks of the prohibitionists themselves are not firm what seek to burden the province with a measure decidedly distasteful to a militant minority. It begins to look as if politics is a passion too strong for human reason, and we can only hope that the people at large will not suffer themselves to be led away by men who are not sincere in what they profess. Hypocrisy is much worse than thirst for whiskey. The one is a vice, the other merely a weakness.

How a Sprain Does Hurt!

But it isn't the pain alone that is dreaded, just think of the loss of time and wages. Sprains without number have been cured by rubbing Polson's Nerviline well into the pores of the skin surrounding the joint, no matter whether it is a sprained wrist, ankle, knee or back, just try Nerviline on it, and see how quickly it will cure. There is only one liniment that can be depended upon to cure sprains, strains and swellings, and that is Polson's Nerviline. Large bottle 25 cents.

At Ormond and Walsh's

An old lady came into our drug store the other day and asked the clerk if we had Pear's soap, said one of the courteous clerks in Ormond & Walsh's drug store to a Times reporter, yesterday.

"Yes, ma'am," replied the clerk, "Do you want it scented or unscented?"

"No," said the old lady, "I don't care for that, bein' it's so small, I'll just take it with me."

Annual Meeting of Officers of 57 Regt.

The annual meeting of the non-Commissioned officers of the 57th Regt, was held in the Buglers' room at the Drill Shed on Wednesday evening. The attendance was fair, and the president occupied the chair. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year,

Hon. Pres. Sergt-Major Brittain.
Pres.—Ambulance Sgt. Sharpe.
Chaplain—Rev. J. C. Davidson.
Sec. Treas.—Col.-Sgt. Cottrell.

Arrangements were made for the annual reception which will take place in the near future and a small committee was appointed to make preliminary arrangements for the same.

Died at Port Arthur

The friends of Mrs. R. H. Payten, who, with her husband, went to Port Arthur to reside early in December, will be greatly pained to hear of her demise, which occurred on Thursday evening. The deceased lady was 58 years of age, and was greatly esteemed and beloved by all who knew her. She has one son, who is employed by Mr. R. C. Braund, the well known grocer. Interment will take place in Port Arthur to-day.

HILL BROOK FARM.

The Owner Comments On Grape Nuts.

A farmer with his out of door work might have reason to expect more than the average good health if he would use proper food and have it well cooked, but many of them, in middle age, suffer torments from dyspepsia, and following that a weakened nervous system.

To show the value of a change in food we quote from a letter written by L. Flagler, owner of Hill Brook Farm, Charlottesville, Va.

"I have spent a very considerable amount of money in trying to cure my stomach trouble with medicines, and have changed climate several times. About two years ago I was taken worse, My heart and kidneys gave me much trouble. I could not sleep nights. Was very nervous, thin and discouraged. Finally I changed my food and began taking Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food. This agreed with me and I thought I could see my way out, so I have stuck to Grape-Nuts for a year and a half and gradually the old troubles have disappeared.

I have made splendid progress in health and strength, sleep well and can now do a good day's work for a man of fifty years.

I know that Grape-Nuts caused the change, and although I am now able to use other food as I like, still I stick to Grape-Nuts because I know how it nourished me, and besides, wife and I both like the food.

She says nothing has helped her nervous system like Grape-Nuts. We buy the food by the case and are very enthusiastic in regard to it."

It is plain that nervous, worn out people can be brought back to health by using Grape-Nuts.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

—Miss Nellie Davies is in Norwood visiting friends.

—Miss Yates and Miss Ross, of Toronto, are visiting in town.

—Mr. Rich. P. Gough, of Toronto, was in town yesterday.

—Miss Ada McBain and Miss Margaret Cox have returned from a visit to Belleville.

—Ven. Archdeacon Casey, of Peterborough, recently appointed Rector of St. Mary's parish, was in town on Thursday.—Lindsay Post.

—The Times was yesterday favored with a call from Mr. T. B. Beavis, of Moosejaw, N. W. T. Mr. Beavis is an old Peterborough boy, where he was born and brought up. He left here for the North-west 19 years ago, where he has been engaged in farming. Mr. Beavis has 450 acres of land, from which he grew last year, 8,000 bushels of wheat, which sold for 54 cents per bushel, and 4,000 bushels of oats, which brought 25 cents per bushel. Mr. Beavis will remain in town several days.

For "Run-down" People there's nothing known in medical treatment to-day so effective and certain of a cure and so magical in its building up power as South American Nervine, because it strikes at the root of all nervous ailments, the digestive organs, makes rich red blood, drives away emaciation, puts on flesh and makes over physical wrecks generally.—148

QUASHED THE CONVICTION

Case of John Kennedy Carried to the High Court of Justice

In the High Court of Justice, Toronto, yesterday, Chief Justice Robertson quashed a conviction registered against John Kennedy for theft, for which he was sentenced to four months imprisonment in the Central. Mr. E. B. Stone, for Kennedy, submitted that the police magistrate could not try Kennedy without his consent. The Chief Justice whose respect for the Magna Charta, and the right of trial by jury is very marked, agreed and quashed the conviction.

My Dear Sir:—Yours of the 14th inst to hand, and because of business, you will pardon my delay in making reply. I am pleased to note the wonderful success of the Canada Business College, and as my mind goes back to some 18 years ago, and I was then permitted to be one of your students, I wish to assure you with a grateful heart, that I have never regretted the many pleasant and happy days I spent in your school. I say pleasant, because I always found you courteous and kind to all, and happy, because I first learned from you the true principles of a business career and which I was called upon to adopt.

Wishing you every success, I am Sir,
Yours Truly,

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

Are looked upon by competent judges as bound to prove a very remunerative investment if bought at the present low prices. Already some fifteen companies have resumed crushing, and every week from now on will see operations commenced on other properties, which have been shut down since the outbreak of the war, and a big advance in prices cannot long be delayed.

We are the only firm in Canada making a specialty of South African shares, and have just completed arrangements with a large London, Eng., firm of brokers, which enables to buy shares on 20 per cent. margin or for cash, as desired. Formerly interest at the rate of 10 per cent, per annum was charged when carrying stocks on margin. We have made arrangements to carry our clients for 6 per cent.

Mining in South Africa is not an experiment, but has been proved a success, as dividends in excess of 250 per annum have been paid from earnings. The WEMMER G. M. CO. of Johannesburg, recently declared a dividend of 150 per cent.

Latest advices predict a substantial increase in the following shares:—BRITISH SOUTH AFRICA (Chartereds), BULUWAYO EXPLORATION, KAFFIR CONSOLS, KLERKSDORPS, NEIDELBERG ESTATES AND SALISBURY DISTRICTS. Full information and daily quotations can be obtained on application to

A Straight Business Transaction

Gets a Splendid Send-Off

H. LeBRUN & CO'S RED-LETTER MOVING SALE.

Eager buyers made the CITY CLOTHING STORE the busiest store in town on Saturday—the opening day of our great Red-Letter Moving Sale. And the general verdict was that the sale was "a straight business transaction." There was no lack of confidence in our bona fide intentions and reductions, and the pronounced success of the opening day is going to be kept up.

The Sale is now in Full Blast

The Red Tickets are here to speak for themselves, and show that slashing reductions all over the store is the rule. Those who have not yet bought their Winter Clothing, Underwear or Furnishings, couldn't strike a luckier time to save money. Those who are supplied are advised that it will pay them to buy ahead for future use.

The Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

PATENTED 10TH MARCH, 1894.

For hard or soft coal, coke or peat. The only coal stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

THE STAR is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion———why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

THE STAR has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica,

After being filled the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

THE STAR is 25 per cent. more economical than any other stove.

More than 5,000 are in use in the lower provinces.

DIRECTIONS

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention.

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room, the size of which is 45 by 33 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other. ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 "Star" stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The "Star" gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal. MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 STAR coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star and it requires a minimum of attention. TIMES PRINTING CO.

WAR CLOUD RISES IN EUROPE AGAIN ENGLAND RESENTS TEUTONIC SLANDER

And Reminds Chancellor Von Buelow that He Has Not Lived Up to the Position Of a Friendly Power

GREAT BRITAIN SAID TO HAVE ONE FRIEND

England Supported in Capitals of the Continent—Bitter Feeling Between Great Britain and Germany at Its Highest Pitch

London, Jan. 13.—The Times' editorial today on the speeches in the Reichstag regarding Chamberlain and the British army says: "Seldom, if ever, has a friendly nation been so grossly insulted in a foreign Parliament." The Times adds: "Never within our memory has an insult met with so mild rebuke from a representative of a friendly power. What we have a right to expect from the Ministers is a definite repudiation of the calumnious statements regarding the British army. We must state frankly and emphatically that the limit of British patience, of endurance, will be overstepped if Von Buelow imagines he can court the friendship of England and at the same time use the King's uniform in order to wipe his parliamentary feet."

The Journal des Debats, quoted by the Paris correspondent of the Times, agrees with the Times that Anglophobia is nowhere so violent as in Germany, despite the Prince of Wales' forthcoming visit to Berlin.

Von Buelow's speech, says the Journal des Debats, is fresh proof of the increasing estrangement between Great Britain and Germany.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times wonders whether the speech of Von Buelow was the funeral oration of the Triple Alliance.

The Times' Paris correspondent says that Von Buelow's speech seems to show imprudent indifference to the feelings of both Italy and Great Britain. The latter who has preserved considerable influence in Italy, does not appear to have any interest in impelling Italy toward a renewal of the Triple Alliance, because if Italy joined France and Russia, Great Britain would have one friend in the new Triple Alliance.

In consideration of the new situation it is natural that Italy should be drawn toward France and Russia. Anyhow, Von Buelow's speech will not prevent her joining them.

THE PHILLIPINE WAR BEING PUSHED

Americans Press the Rebels Hard and Latter Try to Retaliate

STERN MEASURES TO END WAR

General Bell Says the Only Way to Stop the War is to Thoroughly Thrash Every Band of Insurgents

Manila, Jan. 12.—A campaign of destruction is being vigorously waged in Luzon and Samar by the Americans, and the rebels are retaliating by every means in their power. Several important captures have been lately made by the Americans.

The constabulary of Tarlac, Luzon, have captured a number of members of the Filipino secret society called the "Guardia de Honor." The prisoners intended moving to the Island of Polillo, off the east coast of Luzon, where they expect to be free of American interference, temporarily at least, and where they had decided to resist American invasion to the uttermost. Twenty members of the "Guardia de Honor," are charged with sedition.

Last Friday Major Albert L. Myer, of the Eleventh Infantry captured quite an extensive arsenal and plant for the making of cartridges at Ormoc, on the northwest coast of Leyte. Major Meyer also captured another powder factory, large quantities of ammunition, four cannon and several rifles.

CRUSHING OUT THE REBELS.

General J. Franklin Bell's campaign in Batangas province is being conducted "without gloves." Every available soldier is in the field. The columns under the command of Colonels Wint and Dougherty are doing excellent work, and driving the Filipinos in all directions. A number of the latter are fleeing to Tayabas province, where the native constabulary are rendering valuable assistance in capturing men and rifles.

The advocates of peace at Manila deprecate the stern measures employed by General Bell. In reply General Bell says that these peace advocates have had numerous opportunities to use their influence, as they have been given passes through the American lines almost for the asking, and that it has been afterwards proved that they often only went through the lines for the purpose of assisting the insurrection. General Bell says that the best peace methods now is a righteous warfare until the insurrection is completely subdued.

CAPTAIN SCHOEFFEL RECOVERING.

Conditions in the island of Samar are still unsatisfactory, owing to the difficulty of finding the insurgents. Captain Schoeffel, of the Ninth Infantry, who was wounded in a severe hand-to-hand fight last month at Dapdap, Samar Island, between 15 men of Company E of his regiment and a large force of bolomen, has practically recovered from the effects of his wound.

In an official report of the encounter in which Captain Schoeffel was hurt it is said that Schoeffel killed three men before he received his wound, and that the remnant of the detachment of 15 men with him were saved by his personal courage and daring.

The civil authorities say that the Island of Leyte is now perfectly peaceful. On the other hand, the military authorities consider Leyte to be dangerous on account of its proximity to Samar, if for no other reason.

REBEL SUPPORTERS ARRESTED.

The arrest of members of the wealthy Lopez family and the confiscation of their steamers and rice, as well as the arrest of three members of the religious organizations, who were known to be instigators of the insurrection, has had an excellent effect upon the natives.

Major Henry T. Allen (ex-Governor of the Island of Leyte, now on a tour of inspection through that island and Mindanao) reported yesterday that the majority of the signal corps' wires on Leyte had been cut, and that this action was evidently premeditated.

FRANCE PLANNING TO INVADE BRITAIN

A History of Past Efforts in That Direction Published

DIFFICULT PROBLEM TO SOLVE

How the Trick Failed on Former Occasions—Lessons to be Learned From the Past.

London, Jan. 12.—It is an interesting fact, which may or may not have a political and military significance, that within the past two years the French General Staff has been devoting great attention to the study of the problem of invading Great Britain.

The first fruits of that study were seen in the famous article published in the Revue de Deux Mondes in March, 1899, showing how delightfully easy it would be to land a French army on the British coast. But a more permanent and useful consequence has been the issue by the French General Staff of a number of volumes, giving in great detail the history of past attempts at invasion.

In the third volume of his "Projets et Tentatives de Debarquement aux Iles Britanniques," which has just been published under these auspices in Paris, Captain Desbriere gives the history, from the best and most trustworthy sources, of the most famous of all these attempts—that which engrossed the attention of Napoleon in 1803 and 1804, on the eve of Trafalgar.

NAPOLEON OUTWITTED

To the English reader the interest of this latest volume lies largely in its revelation of extraordinary energy and forethought in the British Government. In those days, when wars were "inevitable," the men in power were not afraid to prepare for them. The Captain shows that England stole a march upon even Napoleon, who was of all men the most difficult to surprise, by beginning its armaments well before the declaration of war. This makes certain the answer to a question which has been much disputed—whether Napoleon in 1803 wished for war. He would make no sacrifice to avoid it, but it does appear clearly that he was not responsible for the actual rupture. His fleet is proved from the records to be in a miserable way, and its inferiority can be pictured from the fact that whereas France could not muster in the year 1803 more than twenty three ships of the line, England had over 100 in service before the winter of that year opened.

Notwithstanding this immense naval preponderance, which does not exist in our day, the British Government strained every nerve to collect and drill a vast force for home defence. On the eve of war there were 250,000 regulars, militia and yeomen available; while corps of volunteers were in process of organization.

BOER TACTICS TAUGHT.

The general plan adopted by the British for use in case of invasion was an exact forerunner of that which the Russians adopted in 1812. If the troops were not able to face the invader they were to fall back, removing the inhabitants, to deal with whom, in the event of their being reluctant to withdraw—a not impossible contingency, especially if the enemy landed in Ireland—a special act was passed giving the King and his servants all necessary authority. Then the country was to be devastated. Remonstrances however, proceeding from the Duke of Richmond, led to the decision to abandon the scheme so far as it involved the destruction of property. It was finally decided that all cattle, horses and carts should be driven off, and that everything eatable should be removed.

TO HARASS AND WEARY

A circular by the Duke of York, then Commander-in-Chief, as to the methods to be adopted by the volunteers and irregulars anticipates strikingly the tactics of the Boers: "The moment a landing has been effected," it runs, "the one object of the irregulars should be to harass and weary the enemy. No corps can better contribute to this result than the operations of small bodies of men perfectly familiar with the country. They are to approach the outposts of the invader's army and fire upon them, without permitting themselves to be drawn into a serious engagement or running the risk of being cut off. Clearly, if they take these precautions they will run no risk, having the whole country behind them, and in front an enemy who does not know the roads and who cannot bring with him any but a very weak force of cavalry. If the enemy advances inland, these corps must attack his flanks and rear and cut off all small detachments which separate him from his main body."

A PANIC ENSUED.

Extracts from the daily press show that despite all precautions there was undignified panic. On October 13 it is reported that the people of Dover and the neighborhood were leaving their houses and retiring to London and Canterbury. More than once the beacons signalled that the invaders had actually come, but the alarms were always false. Yet for two long years it may be truthfully said that Englishmen did not sleep peacefully in their beds, and small wonder, when from Dover on clear nights could be seen in the sky the dull glow of the French watch-fires, and when even the great admirals spoke in doubtful tones of the power of the navy to keep the invader from our shores. Not till Trafalgar had been fought and won did the sense of imminent catastrophe pass away.

A Blazing Chimney

The fire department was called out on Saturday evening about 7.30 to a fire in R. H. Leary's livery stable on Water street. On arrival they found it was only a chimney that was blazing and with the aid of a babcock extinguisher, the blaze was put out. There was no damage done as the fire was noticed in good time and was prevented from spreading.

NEW WAR METHODS TO BE ADOPTED

Larger Mounted Colmns and Fewer Guns to be Used

LESSONS LEARNED FROM DEFEAT

Twenty Field Batteries to be Withdrawn from South Africa—Pardon for Sleepy Tommies.

Bloemfontein, Jan. 11.—The Bloemfontein Post published recently a long article dealing with progress of education throughout Orange River Colony during the past year. Under the late Free State Government, the highest number of children in attendance at the schools in any one year was 8,000; last year there were 15,466. Teachers are urgently required; an additional 100 will arrive from England during the next few months. Teachers from Canada and other British Colonies are invited.

GOVERNMENT GRANTS.

Bloemfontein, Jan. 11.—The authorities have arranged the terms on which the colonization of the Government lands in the Orange Free State can be proceeded with. The land will be offered at a fair valuation on a basis of 25 years' purchase, with the option of buying the freehold at any time after three to five years. Government will lend the money to the settlers at a favorable rate of interest for the purpose of stocking the farms and making improvements. The settler is exempt from rent, except a quit rent, for the first year's occupation.

Pretoria, Jan. 11.—Lord Kitchener has decided as a result of the recent reverses to the British small columns, to have the columns in future move in greater strength. The artillery has bee found to hamper the free movement of the mounted columns in the present style of fighting and as no artillery is in use against us there is no necessity for so many guns, and large numbers are to come home. During January and February a score of field batteries will be withdrawn. The needs of India will be first satisfied, and then the balance brought to Southampton. Several cavalry regiments are also badly in need of relief.

DAMAANT'S FIGHT.

Heilbron, Jan. 11.—Details of the gallant stand of Colonel Damant's force indicate that the British officers fought with their revolvers until shot down. Many cases of individual heroism are reported.

CANADIAN WOUNDED.

Ottawa, Jan. 11.—Trooper John Henry French, S. A. C., is reported to have been severely wounded in the shoulder at a fight which occurred on January 4 at the junction of the Zand and Vet Rivers. French has a brother living at Boissevain, Man.

London, Jan 11.—A soldier who was confined in an Irish jail for sleeping at his post while on duty in South Africa, has been pardoned by Lord Roberts, and ordered to return to his regiment. It is believed that a general pardon will be extended on Coronation Day to all military offenders serving long sentences in the British civil jails. It is claimed that greater clemency might be shown in cases where the sentry, exhausted through fatigue and scant rations, has been caught dozing.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

London, Jan. 10.—The release of Miss Ellen M. Stone by the brigands who have held her in captivity since September 3 is believed to be a question of hours. An official telegram received in London this afternoon, and which was despatched from Constantinople after mid-day to-day says the release of Miss Stone is imminent.

NEARLY A TRAGEDY.

Athens, Jan. 10.—By the mistake of a chemist who made up hyoscyamine instead of thiosinamine as prescribed, Mlle. Lele Criese, Lady-in-Waiting to the Queen of Greece, has been poisoned, and now lies between life and death. Dr. Casanow, who was called in, tasted the medicine on the tip of his tongue. He immediately became unconscious, but subsequently recovered. Exactly the same accident happened last year with the same chemist, when a lad died from the effects of the poison. By the King's instructions the chemist is to be prosecuted. Mlle Criese is a great favorite of the Royal Family, and much interest is aroused in her sad case.

STARTLING CONDITION IN MALTA.

Malta, Jan. 12.—A letter from Admiral Sir John Fisher, the Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Squadron, to the Governor, dealing with the moorings question has just been published. Some startling facts are given as to the difficulties experienced by the naval authorities in finding room for the fleet, ships being sometimes put into dry dock without being in need of repairs, solely because of the lack of mooring space, more of which the Navy demand from the civil authorities.

PRESENTATION TO LORD ROBERTS

London, Jan 10.—An interesting presentation has just been made to Lord Roberts by eighty-two of his friends. The list of subscribers included members of both Houses of Parliament, representatives of the army, literature, art, and the stage. The presentation took the form of a portrait in oils of his son, Lieutenant Roberts, (by Mr. Julian Story), as well as of an album, beautifully bound, containing a finely finished miniature in ivory of Lord Roberts, and the following address: "This album, together with a portrait of Frederick Hugh Sherston Roberts, who died from wounds received when attempting a splendid deed of gallantry, for which he was awarded the Victoria Cross was presented to Field Marshall Earl Roberts, K.G., etc., by his friends and admirers as a token of sympathy with him in the grievous loss of his son, and in recognition of the unparalleled services rendered by him to his country."

CANADIAN APPLE IS KING.

London, Jan. 10.—The Standard, commenting upon the Canadian apples sold in London at Christmas time, says:

"The Canadian apple time is king, for it takes the lead as far as quality, color and quantity are concerned, and is making the best prices. The mere fact that this fruitful colony can send us 50,000 bushels of choice apples in a few days at this time of the years proves that the industry is a growing one, for a few years back such a feat was impossible. It must not be forgotten that the Canadian "Seek no Further" and "Twenty ounce Pippins" alone are enough to make the reputation of any fruit-producing country. What the trade would have done without the fine samples of apples that Canada has sent us it would be difficult to imagine. The Canadian apple will make its appearance on many million tables during the festive season."

EXCURSION TO AID STUDY.

London, Jan. 10.—A novel departure has been taken by the Ipswich School Board under the sanction of H. M. Inspector. From the Cavendish street Schools, as an experiment, parties of twenty boys in charge of a master are during school hours to make excursions to local places of interest as an aid to the children's studies in geography, history, etc. In Germany such excursions form a regular part of the curriculum.

SOME NOVEL PATENTS.

London, Jan. 10.—The patents recently registered in London include some notions of a novel character. Germany, for instance, patents a machine for digging potatoes and separating them from the soil. There is a hat provided with a sponge saturated with water, ether, or other substance for keeping the head cool. A pipe lighted from the bottom of the bowl is an idea all the way from Calcutta. Another invention is an umbrella with a handle that bends at two joints.

A MYSTERIOUS BULLET.

Paris, Jan. 10.—A grave act of insubordination is reported from Nimes. The 19th Regiment of Artillery was under inspection, and the non-commissioned officer had hardly given the word of command to his battery when a shot was fired, and the ball whistling past the officer's ear, flattened itself on the wall behind him. The officer at once made a minute examination of the men's carbines, and an inquiry has been ordered with a view to discovering who fired the shot.

STOWAWAYS DISCOVERED.

New York, Jan. 10.—The stowaway still risks the horrors of an Atlantic voyage in midwinter. This week the sea has been very stormy, running mountains high, lashed by hurricanes and swept by hail and snow, yet two stowaways lived in wretchedness for seven days down in the hold of the steamer Kaiserin Maria Theresa, which arrived in New York to-day from Bremen, hoping against hope that all would go well and that soon they would reach the blessed shore and begin life in the great western land of which they had heard so much. But alas! their provisions gave out, and on the seventh day they were forced to crawl on deck and beg for food to keep them from starving. They were treated humanely, but will be turned over to the immigration authorities, and as they came into the country without money, they will be shipped back to the land from whence they came. The captain reports that the storms were so violent that the tremendous seas would often stagger the steamer and he was obliged to proceed at reduced speed in order to ease the ship.

LOOKING FOR PEACE.

Amsterdam, Jan. 10.—The Boer delegates in Holland evidently anticipate that some kind of peace overtures will shortly be forthcoming, though they are reticent as to their reasons for this belief. They maintain, however, that the demand for an unconditional surrender must be abandoned. It is privately admitted that none of the [illegible] will reject what they call "any fair offer of terms."

WANTS IRELAND TO RISE

Major McBride Writes Another Inflammatory Letter to a Dublin Club.

Paris, Jan. 12.—Major John McBride, of the Irish Transvaal Brigade has sent his greeting and advice to the McBride Club in Dublin in a New Year's message, in which the following passages occur:

"There is only one thing that can put new soul into Erin. That is the merry clash of steel kissing steel or the swift sharp ping of the bullet as it seeks a tyrant's heart. Your task is a sacred one. Don't falter in your mission and your few thousands of today will be hundreds of thousands tomorrow. Then hurrah for the finish of the vilest race that ever cumbered God's earth. Of what use are protests? We have boasted long and loud of what we would do when England was in trouble. She is in miserable plight today and we do nothing. One rifle is worth 100,000 protests. I wish you a happy New Year and may 1902 see a happier, more prosperous and more Irish Ireland and the dismemberment of the Cain-marked British Empire."

Boer Soldiers Wearing Khaki

London Eng., Jan. 11.—A resident of Deal forwards the following extract from a letter which he has just received from the front. The writer is describing one of the many skirmishes that constitute the war in its present stage. I was riding to the right, and looking to see where the firing was coming from, the troop itself being on the skyline behind us. As I looked eight men came galloping from a farm some distance from the bottom of the hill towards some rocks, where were other men. I rode to reach the cover of the rocks, so as to prevent them and at the same time the other corporal on the left sang out, "Give it to them," and fired. I then saw one of the riders put up his hand as if warning us not to fire, and saw they were all dressed in khaki, and the one with his hand up wearing a helmet, and otherwise dressed as an officer. I then shouted, "Don't fire: they are our own men," and slackened my pace so that they reached the rocks first. When about twenty yards from them they poured a volley into us (for a man of the —th was at the moment riding up to me, and when they fired was only a few yards behind.) At the first discharge his horse was hit in the neck. The Boers cried, "Hands up!"

I turned my horse's head and put spurs into him, nor took them away till I was safely under cover, the bullets whizzing about me all the time. I undoubtedly owe my life to a good horse. The other man was not hit, for after a bit he came running back, pursued by revolver shots, and minus his rifle and bandoliers, which the Boers had stripped him of. A corporal who was riding on the extreme outside of the flank, noticed horsemen riding in line with them, dressed also in khaki, as if our men. He thought they were strange men and horses, but the khaki deceived him; they edged nearer, however, and when ten yards off, the nearest pointed a revolver and fired point blank at him, but missed. He immediately put spurs to his horse and ran for it. Finding he was likely to get away, for he had a grand horse, after following a short distance and firing all the time, they turned to the other four men with him. One got away and warned the officer in command; the other three having poor horses, were caught, knocked off their horses, and relieved of everything but the clothes they stood up in. Two of the men were let go, and a Boer officer told the third man he must follow him, and was actually being taken away when the Boer's horse was shot, and whilst he ran to get on another our men got got away. The same officer was soon after shot through the jaws, and sent in for our doctor to come and dress his wound. The doctor found him wearing the uniform of the dragoon officer killed the day before.

GERMANY WILL WAIT

And Burst the Monroe Doctrine to Pieces Later on.

New York, Jan. 13.—Germany has quite a large area of tropical possessions and is not under any compulsion to increase this class of holdings. What it wishes is colonial possessions in the more temperate regions of the earth. If the German Emperor could secure control of Southern Brazil, or, indeed, of the entire southern half of the continent of South America, he would find in the acquisition imperial advantages which would justify him in taking a number of risks so far as the unwillingness and opposition of the native inhabitants were concerned. The Germans are not likely to set at open defiance the decrees of the Monroe Doctrine unless the conditions singularly favor them; but there is little doubt that, if the United States became involved in a foreign war, say, with France, Russia or England—that is, not like that with Spain, but one which necessitated the putting forth in a thoroughly energetic manner all of our resources—Germany would find in the preoccupation of the American people its opportunity to seize and firmly possess itself of a considerable part of the continent of South America, and probably these gains would be made under conditions that would force us either to accept them or carry on a war with Germany at considerable disadvantage to ourselves.

THE BOER PRISONERS

Plans for Improving the Refugee Camps Are Under Way.

Bloemfontein, Jan.13.—Material is arriving for carrying out the new water scheme for the Wynberg, Kronstad and Bloemfontein refugee camps, assuring a supply of water which it has hitherto been difficult to obtain owing to the scarcity of transport, the water being carried in carts.

Tenders have now been called for for food supplies, the old contract shortly expiring. The articles called for are of the finest quality. Arrangements have been made for the issuing of fresh vegetables daily. These recently have been practically unknown to the civil population, all of such supplies having to be imported from the coast. The medical comforts include champagne, port, whiskey and brandy of the finest brands obtainable.

Arrangements are progressing to put the refugees in huts instead of tents. Tanks will furnish boiling water. Every assistance is given by the civil administration to assure the health and comfort of the refugees.

STEADY PRESSURE WILL FINISH THE BOER WAR

Clemency Should Not be for the Boers Who Surrender to the British

VIEW OF PRO-BOER AND THE LOYAL DUTCH

Fighting to the Last Gasp Will Pay the Best—Lord Milner's Speech at Johannesburg, South Africa

Johannesburg, Jan. 11.—An official representative banquet was held here last night in honor of Lord Milner, Administrator of British South Africa. Mayor St. John Carr, who presided, preferred to the guest of the evening as the friend of everyone in South Africa. He had tried with patience and argument before the war to promote harmony, but an organized conspiracy frustrated his efforts, and the struggle ensued in which Johannesburg hastened to take a manly part.

Replying, Lord Milner referred with considerable feeling to the gaps in the ranks of the citizens of Johannesburg, the result of a lengthy and devastating campaign. Some of the best known, respected, and loved had gone; others not so well known had fallen victims to war in the field, or its companion, pestilence, and their graves were scattered all over South Africa.

Continuing, the Administrator deprecated the motives of those who were continually counselling a peace similar ot that which prevailed after Majuba. The majority of the people, while regretting the war, recognized its necessity, and would not be cheated of its results by a moment's despondency.

"The war will end all the sooner if we apply a steady physical pressure without fidgeting about negotiations. It is useless to threaten and useless to wheedle. The only thing is imperturbably to squeeze and to keep our clemency and conciliation, both excellent in their proper places, for the Boers who surrender, instead of lavishing it in blandishments upon those who continue the fight."

The pro-boers he said, considered only the Boers. There was no consideration for the rest of South Africa, the loyal British, the loyal Dutch and those of the enemy who had accepted British rule. The moment a Boer surrendered, the pro-Boers had no further interest in him. The mistake, however, was that the great British people were careless of their friends in South Africa. Never had there been such sacrifices by a distant section of the race. This section was conciliatory and had no desire to cut up the Boers, but also had shrewder notions as to how to conciliate them. The theorists at home, while conciliatory, were against a policy which would pay better, that of fighting to the last gasp.

Lord Milner then went on to speak of the glowing future of the country. It was a country of sunshine and fertile soil, with mining and agricultural interests capable of infinite development. Referring to Johannesburg particularly, he said the present danger was that "everyone was too busy to attend to civic duties." His advice to the citizens was to pitch their ideals high. There should be no makeshifts but a model city, built for permanency. They could begin immediately to be of assistance to the Government. Although not elected by the people, the Council was representative.

While Lord Milner was opposed to setting up civil government in opposition to military government, he favored the speediest resumption of the normal life, subject to the military requirements that it was right and necessary for each man to do part of the military duties. He was against giving fictitious importance to remnants of the enemy by allowing them to paralyze the industries of the country. The transition from war to peace would be gradual, but would be no worse for that. It was their duty now to prepare to work to lighten the stress of the feverish activity which prevailed after the war.

Lord Milner's speech was enthusiastically received. At the conclusion, the chairman proposed the health of Lord Kitchener, who was absent from the city. Lord Kitchener sent word that he could not be present, and expressed the hope that his army would soon finish its business in South Africa.

BRYAN AIDS THE BOERS

The Man Who Ran For President of the United States Wants Boers to Win

Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 12.—Four thousand people attended a pro-Boer meeting in Gray's Armory this afternoon. An unexpected event was the appearance of Hon. William J. Bryan, who is in this city as the guest of Mayor Johnson.

An invitation was sent to him and the Mayor to address the meeting. Both accepted and when Mr. Bryan and Mr. Johnson entered the hall the whole audience rose en masse and greeted them with hurrahs and handclapping.

The tri-color of the Boer Republics was a prominent feature of the armory's decorations, and little streamers were tied in the buttonholes of many of the men. Upon the stage were seven native Boers, who had been in some of the early conflicts against the British soldiers. They were driven from the country and are now residents of this city.

BRYAN EULOGIZES THE BOERS.

When the formal speeches of the afternoon were concluded, Messrs. Bryan and Johnson were called upon. Mr. Bryan spoke for about five minutes, during which time he said:

"Sad will be that day, fallen will be the star of our destiny if the time ever comes when struggling freemen feel that they cannot look upon the people of these States for sympathy."

Mr. Bryan said that he was in entire sympathy with the intent of the meeting, eulogizing the fighting Boer farmers, and urged them to continue the struggle. He said that he was glad the war had cost England so dearly, and that the disastrous cost in money and life would be a much needed lesson for the English Government, and teach a lesson which will not soon be forgotten.

Mr. Bryan said he considered it a compliment that the Boers looked to the United States for aid and sympathy, and he considered it a disgrace that no official expression of sympathy had yet been made by this Government. He believed the English people are opposed to the continuance of the war, because they, too, are suffering from the unhappy conflict, and must bear the burden of the cost.

RESOLUTION SENT TO ROOSEVELT.

Mayor Johnson said that he was in full sympathy with the intent of the meeting and expressed similar sentiments to those uttered by Mr. Ryan.

A resolution was passed, and will be sent to the President of the United States, calling attention to the continuance of the war for the past two years and the fact that it has been characterized by the British as a conflict of savagery by confiscation or destruction of property of inhabitants and non-combatants lying within the zone of war.

The President is asked to enforce the treaty of Washington, May 8, 1871, denying to vessels operating under British authority opportunity for the augmentation of supplies of war from the United States, and to continue the efforts of his predecessor to bring to an end the horrors of concentration camps.

Pontypool Installation I.O.O.F.

The officers of Pontypool Lodge, No. 204, I.O.O.F. were duly installed on Friday evening, January 10, by Bro. M. W. Matchett, D.D.G.M., assisted by Bros. R. Scott, J. Edgecumbe, G. Scott, G. Gilbert and W. G. Morrow.

At the close of the installation refreshments were served, and a few hours were spent very pleasantly in speech, song and story.

Pontypool Lodge is one of the most active in the district, and has a large and comfortable hall and lodge room of its own, entirely free of debt.

This completes the installation proceedings for this district for the present term of six months.

William Taylor	J. P. G.
William Corbett	N. G.
J. J. Clarke	V. G.
E. Benson	R. S.

OBITUARY.

Mr. Thos. E. Shannon, of Douro, Succumbs to Pneumonia

Mr. Thos. E. Shannon, a well known and highly respected resident of Douro, died at his residence, at an early hour on Saturday morning. About three weeks ago deceased was stricken with pneumonia, and despite all that could be done death came at an early hour in the morning. Deceased was a son of the late Richard Shannon and was forty-two years of age. He resided all his lifetime on the farm on which he was born with the exception of about five years. He married Miss Petrie, daughter of Mr. James Petrie, of Otonabee, who with two children, is left to mourn the death of a kind and loving husband and father. Deceased was a member of the Foresters also of the Orange Order, he was also a member of St. Paul's congregation.

Friends will regret his death and will sympathize with the bereaved children in their loss.

The funeral will take place this afternoon at one o'clock from his late residence, lot 3, con. 3, Douro, and proceed to the Little Lake cemetery for interment.

Vaccination

We are frequently asked the question if school children can be compelled to be vaccinated as a condition of entering schools. We have to reply that this cannot be done in this state, says an exchange. Formerly there existed rules adopted by the State Board of Health, and by a number of school Boards throughout the state, requiring all children to present a certificate of successful vaccination as a condition of attending school, both public and parochial. While these rules was in existence a great many children were vaccinated and we were free from small-pox. In 1897 these rules were contested and carried to the supreme Court of the state, where it was decided that the law giving the State Board of Health power to pass such rules was unconstitutional on the ground that the legislature could not delegate such power to a board of health. As a result of this decision the rules of the State Board of Health and of the school boards were declared null and void, and since then we have had no rules requiring vaccination that could be enforced. At the last session of the legislature a bill was passed by both houses giving local boards of health authority to enforce compulsory vaccination on all persons, except those who furnished a certificate from a reputable physician that it would be dangerous to their health, or a certificate from a court of record that it was against their religious convictions, whenever in the judgment of the State Board of Health an epidemic of smallpox was threatening in a community. This bill was vetoed and hence did not become a law.

The State Board urges vaccination as the only prevention of the present epidemic smallpox in the state. Wherever we have succeeded in carrying out vaccination thoroughly we have controlled the outbreak in every instance. An outbreak among a large number of Indians in the town of Broadway, near Black River Falls, threatened very serious destruction to their numbers at first, as they would not believe that they had smallpox because it was not more fatal, and they refused vaccination. After some eight or ten deaths occurred, however, the Indians decided that it was smallpox and then gave their consent to be vaccinated. As soon as general vaccination was commenced the disease was very soon under control and in due time ceased to exist. If every community would see to it that every one is successfully vaccinated they would soon see an end of the smallpox in this state. There are many people, unfortunately, who are vaccinated that are not protected by the operation. In order to have the operation protective it should be done by a competent physician who is able to watch the results and see that he obtains the necessary evidence of protection. One reason why vaccination has fallen in disrepute with many persons is because the operation has been done for nothing. Any service which costs nothing will be considered valueless by many persons. The operation of vaccination is one of very great importance and the physician who is competent to select proper virus, perform the operation successfully, watch its results, and succeed in protecting his patient from one of the most loathsome diseases that affects humanity, renders a great service and is entitled to a reasonable fee for the same, but as long as this service is done for ten, fifteen, or twenty-five cents it will be considered of little or no value by many. Moreover, no physician can afford to perform a vaccination, and repeat it if it may be necessary, and watch a case until the result is successful, which should be done in all cases, for a fee of less than from one to five dollars, and we strongly advise that such a fee be charged in all cases where any fee is charged—either charge a reasonable fee or have it understood that you give the service. If this practice can be adopted the reputation of vaccination will soon regain the place to which it is entitled. Towns, villages, and cities, however, should furnish free vaccination to all of their inhabitants who are not able to pay for the same, and in such cases physicians who do the work should be paid a fee sufficient to enable them to do it properly, that is, to take the necessary care to prevent infection, repeat the operation if necessary, and watch the case until evidence is produced to prove the efficacy of the operation, but such work cannot be done for ten, fifteen or twenty-five cents per person. Better by far give such service than to attempt to do it for a fee that is disgraceful and which tempts the operator to hurry and be careless in its performance. What person is there who would not willingly give five dollars rather than have the face pitted by smallpox, not considering the expense, distress and loss of time from a long illness, with a possible loss of life. But few persons reason logically concerning such matters.

Toronto's Public Works

THE annual report of the city engineer of Toronto, just issued, maintains its character as an interesting and instructive document. Commenting on various features of street work, Mr. Rust says:

"In 1897 an experiment was made with different kinds of wood as paving material, on the west approach to the King street subway, the woods used being beech, maple, rock elm, soft elm, hemlock, Norway pine, white pine and cedar. All the blocks were rectangular, 6½ inches deep, and 3 to 12 inches long, with the exception of the cedar, which were the ordinary round blocks. In June of this year these different woods were examined, with the following results: Beech, nearly all the blocks were decayed; maple, a few of the blocks were in good condition, but the majority of them had dry rot; rock elm, most of the blocks were in good condition, with the exception of a few which showed signs of dry rot; soft elm, the blocks were all decaying; hemlock, the majority of the blocks were sound; Norway pine, were in fairly good condition, but the traffic had decreased their depth to about a half inch, and a few of them showed signs of dry rot; white pine were in as good condition as the Norway pine, a great many of the blocks showing signs of dry rot. The round cedar blocks were in better condition than any of the other woods.

The records attached to the report of the assistant-engineer in charge of the roadway department, show that 24,-466 miles of new pavements and roadways, and 15,385 miles of concrete and brick sidewalks were constructed during the year, divided as follows:

a,348 miles of asphalt pavement; 6,0 miles of brick pavement; 7,343 miles of cedar block pavement, and 2,406 miles of macadam roadways, and about two miles of gravel, scoria and stone sett roadways.

The asphalt pavement appears to be the favorite, I think, however, that brick for residential streets will last quite as long and will not cost as much for maintenance as asphalt, but the great objection to this class of pavement is the noise. We have as far as possible taken steps to remedy this, but there is still considerable rumbling, and I am afraid it is absolutely impossible to entirely prevent it. The bricks used in the construction of the various pavements have been entirely of Canadian manufacture, and in some instances they have not complied fully with the abrasion test called for in the specifications. These tests were made with the old form of rattler, as adopted by the Brick Manufacturer's Association, but I have since ascertained that this has not given satisfactory results, and is being gradually discarded, and the department, at present, is engaged in making fresh tests with a somewhat different form of machine."

The total street mileage is nearly two hundred and sixty miles. The extent to which the different classes of pavement are used in Toronto is indicated by the following table, showing the percentage laid of the different classes:

	Per cent.
Cedar block	27.30
Stone or scoria	.26
Asphalt	11.80
Wood on concrete	.26
Macadam	19.10
Cedar blocks with asphalt between tracks	.08
Cedar block with brick between tracks	5.80
Macadam with stone setts between tracks	.25
Bricks	4.15
Gravel	2.06
Unpaved	29.33

The Model City Idea

THE suggestion for the creation of a model city as a part of the St. Louis Exposition is receiving favorable editorial comment and press notices of the same as published in this number. The idea is to build a model city in all its physical aspects, showing different styles of street pavements with a variety of curbing, cross-walks, side-walks, catch bassins; the adornment of the same by the proper planting of trees, shrubs and flowers; different kinds of street signs, lamp posts; different methods of street lighting, street cleaning etc. There will be a model city hall on a small scale, public library building, filled with books on municipal subjects, and a building wherein will be exhibited There will be a municipal art building, showing models of public buildings, photographs of public works, parks, etc. All of this to those interested in municipal affairs would be worth going from California to see.

Then another suggestion has been made that is worth adopting and that is to hold a municipal congress at some fixed time which will be composed of the members of the various municipal organizations of the country—The League of American Municipalities. The National Municipal League. The Society of Municipal Improvements, The Federation of Improvement Clubs and some of the State Leagues. This congress would devote its time to the discussion of municipal problems.

Another suggestion which we wish to make and that is, if possible the model city should have a governing body composed of men prominent in municipal work in various parts of the country, and their services should be compensated. Their work should be not only to administer the affairs of the city but they should devote their time to the framing of municipal ordinances, covering the entire field of municipal activity. Having at hand all the various local ordinances, it should be their duty to recommend those that are the best, and at the same time they should suggest proper charters, congressional amendments and state laws governing cities. This would make a work of several months, but its benefits to the country would be invaluable. The progress which would be the result of such a scheme, the benefits to be derived by the cities of the country would be beyond measure.—California Municipalities.

City Advantages for Rural Homes

THE isolation of the farmhouse is fast disappearing. The closer weaving of the web of transportation facilities by the continual construction of steam and electric roads; of telegraph and telephone lines, and the ever-extending postal service is rapidly bringing every farmer's home within quick, low cost, and easy touch with the world. The farmer may read the epitome of the world's doings in his daily paper almost as quickly as an urban citizen, and much more thoroughly, because there is less to detract his attention when his hour for reading comes. The growth of public improvements is rapidly creating one great city, covering the national domain, of which the states are but wards and the cities but precincts. Under these conditions the populations of cities will be distributed over increasingly wide areas. The population tables, to be correct, should show the population for the same areas from decade to decade. If this were done it might appear that the process of distribution from congested centers is as operative as the process of concentration around advantageous centers. When rural homes have city advantages more homes will stay in the country.

Flagmen

Flagmen do not comply with the city ordinance requiring gates at all these crossings, and at best they are only partial and in fact very inadequate protection. Marshfield and Stevens Point have both tried the flags and found them failures. Marshfield recently passed an ordinance requiring gates, the same as this city has done. None of the roads paid any attention to this ordinance, and the city attorney of that city recently begun proceedings against them to compel them to comply with the ordinance. These proceedings have had the desired effect and all the roads are now preparing to construct gates. That is just what this city should do in the matter. The roads can be forced to build the gates and it is to the interest of the city and the general public that they be made to do so.—Wood County Reporter.

JUSTICE

Is portrayed as a woman, yet her sex might complain that they get scant benefit of her powers. There is little justice, it would seem, in the suffering that many women undergo month after month.

Justice acts upon the legal maxim that ignorance of the law cannot be pleaded in mitigation of punishment. It is ignorance which causes so much womanly suffering. Ignorance of the requirements of womanly health; ignorance on the part of those who attempt to cure and fail, and ignorance of the fact that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures womanly diseases. It establishes regularity, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

"When I first wrote to Doctor Pierce concerning my health," says Mrs. Mollie R. Carpenter, of Linaria, Cumberland Co., Tenn., "I was so weak I could only write a few words until I would have to rest; was so weak I could hardly walk. Words cannot express my sufferings; dimness of sight, palpitation, shortness of breath, black spots or else shining lights before my eyes, terrible headache, numbness in my arms and hands and tongue, also my jaws would get numb; constipation, falling of the uterus, disagreeable drains, soreness through my bowels; in fact I was diseased from head to foot. Now I can do my own washing and cooking. I can take a ten quart pail in one hand and a six quart pail in the other (full of water), and carry both one-fourth of a mile and never stop to rest. I am as heavy as I was at 19 years (125 pounds). I used thirty bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery' and twenty-five vials of 'Pleasant Pellets.'"

CHAINED FOR TEN YEARS
HAY FEVER
ASTHMA
EVERY BOTTLE BRINGS RELIEF.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-size bottle."

Drs. Taft Bros.' Medicine Co.:

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

Avon Springs, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

Dr. Taft Bros. Medicine Co.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows at 130th street, New York. I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the 1st of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully,

O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

Dr. Taft Bros. Medicine Co.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle and I am ever grateful. I have a family of four children and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

HUSBAND AND
A NOVEL

She went slowly down the steps. Just in front of her stretched the park, and yielding to a sudden impulse, Katharine turned and walked as fleetly as her feet would allow across the wide road into it. She felt she would rather sit out in the air and think it all out. She was glad she had agreed to accept the post, for the remuneration was most handsome and fitted in with a desire that had grown in her mind ever since she had resolved to be independent, namely, that now she would be able to materially help Lucy Smythe, whom she knew required such help badly. It was almost as if some good fairy had exercised her power and brought about this speedy engagement; and yet, though Katharine felt satisfied and pleased more than gratified by Lady Drummond's affectionate appreciation of her dead father and his art, there lived through it all that same curious, dull pain at her heart that had come when she gazed on Ormande's picture, and heard that he was deeply in love with Barbara Mostyn.

Katharine sighed uneasily as she sat down on an empty bench in a quiet corner, and wondered why such a pain should come to her. She had never felt the like before, although as we know well, she had had her share of human suffering. For the first time the hateful remembrance of Gordon and her connection with him faded out of her mind, and she thought of Lord Otway, and Lord Otway alone.

"I could trust him, believe in him, as I trusted and believed in daddy," she murmured to herself. "Lady Drummond is right—an angel he is, indeed!"

She sighed again, and then she gave a little cry of astonishment that was echoed by another person just in front of her.

"Miss Brereton!" exclaimed Lord Otway, coming to a sudden standstill in his amazement; "can I believe my eyes? Is it really you? You here, in London, when I was imagining you sitting under those dear old trees in Miss Weston's garden, alone with your book and your thoughts! What happy fate led me to walk down this particular path to-day, I wonder?"

"I had forgotten you were in London," she said hurriedly, letting her hand rest in his for a moment.

His face fell a little.

"Ah, of course, I cannot expect you to think about me very much, Miss Brereton."

"On the contrary, you occupied my thoughts at the very moment I happened to look up and saw you before me."

"Did I really?" All the old eagerness and delight came back again. "How good of you to say so."

Katharine drew her hand away. She was growing more herself now.

"Are you staying in London long, Miss Brereton?"

He found it very difficult to frame this simple sentence. The sight of the sweet face had roused the dormant love that had been increasing every day since he had left her into a tumultuous, passionate life.

Katharine grew paler and paler; memory had dispersed the dreamland effectually. She recollected nothing, save that his friendship was separated from her forever, separated by a gulf across which no bridge could be thrown. What bond of sympathy could there be while Craven Adair's still, white face stood a phantom barrier between them? No, her lot was shadow and shame—his lay in the warmth and sunshine of true love. The pain, that dull, dead ache, grew worse as Katharine gazed on his noble, handsome face.

"An angel in human form, indeed; but what place have angels in my wretched life?" she said to herself, bitterly.

"Surely you are not alone in London, Ka—Miss Brereton?" he asked hurriedly. "You have friends here?"

Her pale lips quivered. She felt so dazed, agitated, conventional conversation was almost impossible. She longed to put her hand in that strong, bronzed right one of his, to cling to it while she poured out all the misery, the horror, the struggle of her aching heart; but what claim had she to such happiness, she, the wife of his cousin's murderer, she, shadowed and stained by association with crime; she, a stranger and indifferent to him? Katharine felt it impossible to argue or reason with herself; she only knew that it would be better, far, far better for her peace of mind if Ormande, Lord Otway, were to leave her now and never approach her again. Poor child! she was utterly ignorant of the true meaning of this wish. She had no words ready in which to transcribe it, but her whole wealth of love—love, deep, true, unfathomable, unchangeable—was given to this man, and there it would remain till death came to chill the warmth of life in her veins.

"I leave to-morrow, and I have found friends," she forced herself to answer him, and he could not help noticing how husky the sweet notes of her voice were. "I—I think I must go home now, Lord Otway. I will bid you good-by."

"Will you not allow me to escort you home? Please do, Miss Brereton. You really are not strong enough to go alone. Besides, I should so much like to tell you all about my search for poor Craven. You were so sympathetic that I feel sure you will be sorry when I tell you I have met with nothing but disappointment at every turn, and——"

"I—I think I must have a cab," Katharine faltered. The relief that followed on the agony of suspense and dread she had just been enduring, expecting every instant to hear that some clue had been found had been too great. She half reeled, and had to sink onto the seat again. "But please don't trouble about me, Lord Otway. I—I can manage for myself—very well."

"Do you want me to go away?" he asked, standing before her, a tall stalwart, handsome form, in his clerical hat and coat. He bit his lip to still the trembling that would come.

Katharine lifted her eyes to his for a moment.

Want him to go away! Ah, if she could only have told him what joy, what unutterable joy, his presence meant to her! But he must never know—never, never!

"Do not think me unkind," she said, gently. "I will gladly accept your help—if you wish it." They with a faint smile—"it seems as if I were always doing so nowadays."

"Are you stronger now? Can you take my arm and walk to a cab? I am afraid I cannot bring one in here; they will not allow cabs to come into the park; but it is only a few steps."

Katharine pulled her strength together, and rose with some difficulty and Ormande took her slender hand in his and drew it through his arm.

"Why do they allow you to do such things?" he said, half jokingly, half indignantly. "You are not fit to be out alone. Mrs. Smythe ought to know better!"

"Mrs. Smythe is not with me!" Katharine paused. "I have decided not to live with Mrs. Smythe any longer, Lord Otway," she said, after a moment. "I am tired of being idle and useless, so—so I am now independent! To-morrow I start on an engagement as companion to a rich and pretty young lady, whom I am told you know well."

"Some one that I know?" he repeated. His brow had contracted at her last speech. He had never dreamed of this, and it pained him. Katharine, his fair, lovely, pure-face love, to go out and work for her living! It was a bitter thought.

"How little one knows what the future holds for us," Katharine said, half wearily. And then in a few words she told him of her visit to Lady Drummond, and the very unexpected result.

Ormande was silent when she finished.

"Companion to Barbara Mostyn!" he was thinking. "It will be a hard, unsatisfactory life; how I wish I could prevent it. If—if only I could muster up courage and tell her how dear, how precious she is to me, but that is impossible just yet. I must wait, yet how bitter it is to wait and know that she, my darling, my queen is working as a slave to a hard mistress."

Katharine misconstrued his silence.

"He is vexed, he does not approve. I am a stranger, and for all he knows I may be a bad influence for her. She is the woman he loves, and it is of her welfare he is thinking."

There was silence between them until they passed through the park gates, and approached the edge of the curb to hail a hansom. Then as they stood there Ormande turned to speak to the girl. What his words were Katharine neither knew nor heard, for she had started back with a smothered cry, and the hand that lay on his arm trembled as if she had been seized with ague.

Ormande, gazing steadily at her, not see the cause of this start and cry, but Katharine's gray eyes were glued to the smart dog-cart that was just bowling past them, to the man's form that was driving it, and to the man's handsome, swarthy, insolent face that was regarding her with a sneer and smile mingled.

In another moment Gordon Smythe had vanished like a phantom in a dream, and Katharine was seated in a hansom, her hand grasped in Lord Otway's.

"Good-by for to-day, Miss Brereton," Ormande said gently. "With your permission I will call and inquire for you to-morrow, and shall be only too honored if you will allow me to assist you on your journey to Brexley. It will not be good-by for long, though, for Miss Mostyn has repeatedly invited me down to her home, and I have a very strong feeling that I shall accept the invitation on the earliest opportunity."

All through the long drive to her modest lodging, Katharine saw nothing of the crowd and glare of the London streets: two faces lived in front of her eyes, the swarthy, evil countenance of her husband, and the frank, sunny, noble face of the man whom she knew, all at once, was dearer to her than anything the world held.

Lady Drummond was round to look up her protege by sharp ten o'clock.

"Good child! Everything packed and ready to start," she said, approvingly; then she sniffed up the scented atmosphere with delight. "Dear me, what splendid roses! Where did they come from, my dear? But there, how rude I am; please forgive the question! Barbara always says I am the most curious person in the world. Your train goes at twelve from Charing Cross, and I am going to drive you there myself, and see you comfortably started."

Katharine felt inexpressibly glad that she had sent a graceful refusal to the offer of assistance Lord Otway had made her in the note that had accompanied the bouquet of roses.

"You go straight through to Brexley. I sent a wire to Parsons this morning—that is the housekeeper at the Hall—telling her to be sure and send a carriage to meet you. Here are some newspapers; and I hope you will get on with Barbara. Write to me at once if there are any difficulties. But you are a sensible girl, and I don't see why there should be any difficulties. Remember, Barbara has been a spoilt child all her life!" Lady Drummond put out her plump hand. "Good-by, my dear! I feel so thankful that I have been able to do your father's child some good. And one word, Miss Brereton; if Lord Otway should visit Brexley, pray do all you can to forward the match, and let me know how it is going on. Once more, good-by."

Katharine smiled a faint farewell, then she sank back and gazed at her bunch of roses with blurred eyes.

"Oh, love—my love," she said to herself sorrowfully; "why have you come to add to my miseries? Surely my lot was hard enough without you!"

Then she lifted the roses to her lips passionately, and crushed their soft, dewy, fragrant hearts to her burning eyes.

"You are too, too sweet; you are not for me—not for me!" she murmured, and with one more kiss, she deliberately threw the flowers from the window. "Roses must go where love dwells. My heart will never know the sweetness of his love; I will, I must stamp out this madness; it should be as easy to do as to fling away his flowers. I have only to remember what I am—a murderer's wife!—wife of the man who slew Craven Adair; and when I remember that, I can see the barrier that rises between us—I can know how far apart from me he stands; and seeing, knowing this, I shall learn wisdom, destroy this foolish love, and then have peace in forgetfulness!"

Poor Katharine! To fling away roses was an easy task, but to tear out this newly-born love was something beyond her puny strength, be the desire ever so great.

When Brexley was reached, Katharine got out on the platform, collected her luggage, which was very small, and then was conducted to a wagonette that was waiting.

She little imagined as she drove away from the station that Gordon Smythe's black eyes were following her on this her first entrance on her new life.

He uttered an oath of mingled surprise and anger as he beheld the girl. Not until this moment had Gordon known that Katharine was in this train that he had travelled down by from London.

"This is part of the tomfoolery of earning her living that mother wrote me, I suppose," he said to himself. "Looks as if she had fallen on her feet. Gordon, my boy, your lucky star is in the ascendant. First find out if this paper speaks the truth, and then by—bring that young woman to her bearings. She is your wife, my boy, don't forget that, and her face is worth something if worked properly. Once this cursed thing is set right, I shall have a word or two to say to Miss Katharine Brereton."

He gave a short laugh, and then walked down the platform. Few people would have recognized in this shabbily dressed man, his features half disguised under a slouched felt hat, the smart, handsome Gordon Smythe.

"Can you direct me to the asylum?" he asked a porter, civilly.

"I'm going one for awhiles. I'll walk a bit and set you on the road to it, mate."

The two men turned and toiled along the hot, dusty lane in silence.

"There you be, mate. Go straight ahead, you'll come to it."

Gordon thanked the man, and hurried on to the square, red-bricked building, which was exactly like the hospital, and was erected—as the stranger to Brexley soon discovered—by Squire Mostyn for the use of the several small parishes around.

As he approached the iron gates of the asylum Gordon pulled out of his pocket a copy of a daily paper, and perused a certain paragraph eagerly.

This paragraph told how a travelling tinker and his wife had rescued an unfortunate man from the mouth of an old coal mine near the town of Ledstone. The poor creature, it was supposed, had missed his footing and fallen over in the dark, and it was simply miraculous that he had not been dashed to pieces. The tinker and his wife had taken the man into their home—a caravan on wheels—and nursed him for three weeks, till he grew so bad they were compelled to call in the assistance of a doctor, so one evening, as they settled in Brexley village, they solicited aid and charity from the Brexley authorities etcetera.

Gordon read through the paragraph till he came to the end, which said that, despite every available effort, no clue as to the identity of the man could be discovered, and the Brexley authorities having pity on his condition, had submitted his case to Miss Mostyn, the lady of the manor, who had at once commanded that the unfortunate man should be placed in the asylum built by her father, and carefully nursed, if possible, back to health and reason.

This paragraph was the cause of Gordon Smythe's journey to Brexley. He had neither eaten nor rested till he set off to see for himself how true it was, and now he stood at the gates of Brexley Asylum, and, ringing the bell, he asked to see the superintendent.

He had concocted a very plausible story, taking, of course, an assumed name, so that he might, by any means get a glimpse of the man so strangely rescued, though he felt more than satisfied that it must be Craven Adair, and that he could breathe freely and without fear of detection, a condition of things that seemed heavenly, after the hunted, miserable dread he had experienced during the past weeks.

The superintendent saw him at once and listened to his tale, and ordered that he should be admitted to the unknown man without delay. Half an hour later Gordon Smythe was walking back to the station with an evil look of triumph on his face.

"They say dead men tell no tales, why not lunatics as well?" he communed. "That maimed, decrepit creature can never denounce me. I am free to live again. Curse it, if I had only known all this time—free to live, and Katharine shall learn that before many days are over. She is my wife, and my wife she shall be before all the world. I owe her many a bad turn, and I'll pay them all, as sure as my name is Gordon Smythe!"

To Be Continued.

A Fox's Revenge.

A gentleman out shooting one day came to a river, where he saw six geese beyond shot. He determined to wait for them to approach the shore. While sitting there he saw a fox come down to the shore and stand some time and observe the geese. At length he turned and went into the woods and came out with a very large bunch of moss in his mouth. He then entered the water very silently, sank himself, and then, keeping the moss above the water, himself concealed, he floated among the geese. Suddenly one of them was drawn under the water, and the fox soon appeared on the shore with the goose on his back. He ascended the bank, and found a hole made by the tearing up of a tree. This hole he cleared, placed in it the goose, and covered it with great care, strewing leaves over it. The fox then left; and while he was away the hunter unburied the goose, closed the hole and resolved to wait the issue. In about an hour the fox returned with another fox in company. They went directly to the place where the goose had been buried, and threw out the earth. The goose could not be found. They stood regarding each other for some time, when suddenly the second fox attacked the other most furiously, as if offended by the trick of his friend. During the battle the hunter shot them both.

The Revolution in English Character.

It is the opinion of Mr. Bernard Shaw, as expressed in a characteristic preface to a late volume of his plays, that the nature of the English people has, within the past ten years, undergone certain conspicuous modifications. Excitability—"theatricality" is his own word for it—Mr. Shaw believes to have been steadily mounting in force among the English, usually so solid and stolid; and this he ascribes to the pronounced romanticism of taste developed among them by the literature, the books and plays, of the past five years; a taste which has caused them to lose their true sense of the realities, with all the steadying effects thereof.

It will not be disputed that the special style of literature in vogue during a period leaves its impress upon it, nor will it be gainsaid that the demands and tastes of the period in turn determine the essential nature of its literary supply. We are hearing it said on all sides now that popular education accounts for the love of the novel of adventure. Popular education creates an enlarged reading public, but one which does not wish to have the realities of life laid before it; which, indeed, in many cases, reads, or goes to the play, just to escape reality. If one accept this explanation of certain present phenomena it is only going a step farther to find in all democratically organized, popularly educated societies an inherent inclination toward romanticism. As no countries have carried the modern experiment so far as the English-speaking countries, we ought not to be surprised to see a strong bent toward the romantic attitude showing itself, in many directions, in an English or American public; the romantic attitude here meaning any attitude betraying absence of a full perception of the realities, or disinclination to look at them.

Out of all this we seem to draw three propositions: that democracy appears to presuppose a certain sort of popular education, that without that education there would be no democracy, and yet that that education is calculated to destroy the sense of the realities. Now how is this? The very plea made for the education which, more and more, is prevailing against the classical education, is just this—that it cultivates the true perception of real things. It is a "practical" education for that precise reason, say its advocates. Why, then, asks the writer of "The Point of View" in "Scribner's Magazine," should this same generation manifest so much liking for the romantic fiction, the romantic plays, which are a means of getting away from the real conditions of existence? He proceeds to answer this question as follows: "It may very probably be that this liking is a taste of the moment, without ulterior connections or deeper significances. And, indeed, it seems to have been too much overlooked by some writers who have no love for the novel of adventure, that it is by no means the first time in the world that romance has been in high favor. It is none the less true that this subject does suggest another of far greater moment, which is the question what the "popular" education ought to be, and whether the democratic state of modern man really needs exactly that form of it which is now so insisted upon as essential to its maintenance and well-being. To perceive the realities in the high sense and in that sense be willing to abide by them, is never, at any time, the portion of more than the few. But general education goes forward, very properly, on the assumption that all may be made in some degree to know the life to which they belong, to realise it. Realization comes, however, only in part through the development of practical efficiency. It comes also through the unfolding of the spiritual nature, the growth of moral vision, the dreams of the imagination—to none of which is the 'classical' education a stranger."

Pleasing Kind of Mal de Mer.

News comes from Honolulu that the transport "Thomas," which reached there on August 1, having on board three hundred male and one hundred female teachers, en route for the Philippines to engage in educational service under the Taft Commission, developed a veritable matrimonial epidemic. The young men and women on board represented almost every State of the Union. After the transport left San Francisco friendships were formed which soon ripened into love, and the day prior to the arrival at Honolulu Captain Buford found that thirty couples desired the nuptial knot tied. He refused to permit the ceremony on board the vessel, and the next day a clergyman at Honolulu made the thirty pairs happy by uniting them in matrimony. Prior to the sailing of the transport from Honolulu several other cases were reported. The departure from New York last week of the fifty-four Cuban girls and twenty-four men, who have been students at the summer school of Harvard University, developed the fact that they, too, had been victims of Cupid's darts, although their courtships have only reached the engagement stage. Most of the Cuban men are returning engaged and several Harvard students and professors are said to have lost their hearts to the girls from the South. Five of the ladies took home with them diamond engagement rings.

A Humane Pater.

One reads so frequently of the paternal boot as applied to the undesirable youthful suitor that it is a pleasure to chronicle the more humane method adopted by a wealthy Glasgow merchant for choking off a "follower" of his daughter. The girl was very young, so was the follower, but nevertheless he called formally on the object of his affections. The merchant and his wife entered the room, the latter bearing a glass of milk and a huge slice of bread spread with butter and jam. "Now, dear, run away to bed," said the kindly mother to her daughter; "it's time that all good girls should be in bed." Then the Glasgow merchant addressed the astonished young man: "Now youngster, you drink that glass of milk, and take that slice of bread and jam to eat on the road home—and hurry, for your mother must be anxious about your being out so late by yourself." The young man did not call again.

Anxious Father (from top of stairs)—Say, Mary Jane! Mary Jane—Yes, papa. "Is it eleven o'clock yet?" "Yes, papa." "Well, give the young man my compliments, and ask him to kindly close the front door from the outside."—Chicago "Daily News."

Anson Van Norman Dead

Peterborough friends will learn with regret of the death of Mr. Anson Van Norman, at St. Thomas on Friday. Deceased was a well known commercial traveller and father of Mr. Fred Van Norman, formerly of town and who died of enteric fever in South Africa when he was serving with the first Canadian contingent. Interment will take place at Belleville.

Interred in New York

The last rites of the Roman Catholic church having been administered, the body of the late Bernard Henry, who died in Bellvue hospital, New York, on Monday from diphtheria, was interred in Holy Cross cemetery on Saturday morning. Mr. Myles Henry received a wire to that effect at noon on Saturday. The body in a hermetically-sealed coffin had been prepared for shipment to Peterborough, but the health authorities did not feel disposed to forward it.

CHURCH NOTES

At the George Street Methodist Church the anniversary services were held yesterday. Rev. C. E. McIntyre, of Napanee, preached at both services to very large congregations. The choir and orchestra were under the leadership of Mr. Glidden, and rendered music appropriate to the occasion.

At St. John's Church, Rev. E. A. Langfeldt preached in the morning and in the evening W. L. Armitage occupied the pulpit.

At All Saints' Church, Rev. Arthur Murphy preached at both services to large and appreciative congregations.

At St. Luke's Church Rev. W. L. Armitage preached in the morning and the rector, Rev. E. A. Langfeldt, in the evening.

At St. Paul's Church Rev. G. Yule preached in the morning and Rev. Dr. Torrance in the evening. The attendance at both services was very large.

At St. Andrew's Church, the pastor Rev. J. G. Potter, preached at both services.

—Rev. D. O. Crossley conducted the services in the Charlotte Street Methodist church yesterday, which were largely attended.

—Ven. Archdeacon Casey will deliver his farewell sermon in St. Peter's cathedral on Friday evening next. Father Casey leaves on Saturday to take charge of the Lindsay parish.

—Mr. Athol McBean, Winnipeg, was in town last week, the guest of his cousin Mrs. R. H. Kells.

—Mr. James Finnie, of Emerado, North Dakota, is visiting in town for the first time in twenty years. He sees a great many changes in that time.

—Misses Louise and Grace Barnet of Renfrew are visiting their sister Mrs. C. B. McAllister. The Misses Barnet leave in a few days for the Pacific coast.

MEMORIAL SERVICE

Sermon Preached by Rev. Dr. Torrance in St Paul's Church Last Night

In St. Paul's church last evening, Rev. Dr. Torrance preached a memorial sermon, taking for his text, I Cor. 15: 55—56, "Oh Death! where is thy sting? Oh Grave! where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law; but thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

This song of victory is inspiring, as it celebrates a triumph over a cruel and powerful foe. Earthly conquerors have been whose names were in terror. Their paths were marked by destruction and bloodshed and they brought into subjection thousands of their fellow men. But they in turn were vanquished by a stronger foe and sent into captivity. The apostle has gone step by step in his argument on the subject of resurrection until he reached the final summing up in the words of the prophet, "Death is swallowed up in victory." There are three points for consideration, 1st, the conquerors triumphant question; 2nd, his humiliating confession; 3rd, his joyful thanksgiving.

The question—"Oh, Death! where is thy sting? Oh, Grave! where is thy victory?" is very similar to the words of the prophet Hosea and were probably in the mind of the apostle at the time. Death has had a victory; from the beginning until this great Warrior King, all have had ultimately to bow to his supreme power. Alexander, Charlemagne and Napoleon were great conquerors, but death conquered them all. To show his power he attacked the Son of God, and for three days he held his captive. Death is a warrior who devastates the country alarms all by his approach and casts a shadow over the flower strewn path.

The word signifying "sting" here denotes anything having a sharp point. So death is pictured in the mind of the apostle as a warrior bearing a deadly weapon, and as he smites the members of humanity the result is the full manifestation of the corruption of the body as it returns to dust.

But the apostle sees the tables completely turned; he sees another conqueror appear who leads captivity captive, and he who has so long triumphed is himself ingloriously defeated. Death is swallowed up in victory. He sees destruction come to an end, and death and hell cast into a lake of fire.

The humiliating confession — "The strength of sin is the law." Sin is here, therefore death reigns. Sin came into the world by one man, and death by sin. Death has sin for a sting. Sin introduces death and becomes the instrument used in its warfare. Milton pictures sin issuing from the head of Satan, and death the child of them both. With sin as its sting, death's victory is completed and in the case of the ungodly it extends to the world to come, banishing lost souls from the presence of God forever.

Sin and death are linked together by law. Were it a linking by passion, policy or anything but law of God the consequences might be less disastrous. In the proportion in which the believer perceives the perfectness of God's law is the consciousness of the corruption of his nature. It is because of the law that sin results in condemnation.

The joyful thanksgiving—"But thanks be unto God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." We learn how death is deprived of its sting and of its victory. It is God's gift to us, but it was a matter of great difficulty. It required divine wisdom to devise and divine power to execute the plan. It was necessary for the Son of God to obtain the victory for us. Death exults in his reign of 4,000 years, but he is met on his own ground by a greater Conqueror. As Goliath met David, so death sees his adversary in dire extremity, weighed down by the sins of the world. His power over the Son of God is of short duration; and now the stone of the sepulchre is rolled away—we see the grave clothes where the body lay, and the angels keeping guard. Death is overthrown, and his Conqueror has risen, saying,—"I am He that liveth and was dead; and behold I am alive forever more, and have the keys of death and of hell." It is appointed unto men once to die, but the sense of victory comes in the freedom from the fear of death. But only those who have been freed from the dominion of sin can have the victory over death. After the deliverance of the Israelites and the destruction of Pharaoh's host, they sang a song of gratitude, and children of God should join in the Apostle's song, "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." It was meant that time should be given to the consideration of death, for many of the congregation had been called away in the past year. During 1901, besides 7 adherents, 17 communicants had passed away. They were: Wm. Stoddart, Mrs. Little, Mrs. Scott, Mrs. Tully, Mrs. J. A. Cameron, Jas. Reid, Mrs. E. Thompson, Miss A. Patterson, Mrs. J. Gray, Mr. Roseberry, Geo. Munro, Mrs. McIntosh, Mrs. Morgan, Mrs. Wm. Stewart, Wm. Kerr, Mrs. Hoole and Mrs. Sanderson.

Although but twelve days of this year had gone, four of the congregation had been called away. While it was not his custom to eulogize the dead, except in very special cases, Dr. Torrance felt constrained to say a few words of the late Mr. J. H. Roper; he had been so connected with the congregation and had held many prominent positions in it. Truly he was a man who never made an enemy and never lost a friend, and the many sorrows which fell upon him during the latter part of his life were borne with wonderful submission.

The music was most appropriate to the occasion, the choir rendering the beautiful anthem by Tennyson, "Crossing the Bar."

ALL SAINTS' CHURCH

To be Separate Parish Rev. W. L. Armitage to be First Rector

The Bishop of Toronto has written to the church wardens of All Saints' stating that he would be pleased to forward the official document of All Saints' erection to a separate parish. The Bishop also stated that it would give him pleasure to appoint Rev. W. L. Armitage to be first rector of All Saints', and that he would come to Peterborough to induct the new Rector, as soon as a date for the service was fixed.

Needless to say, this communication has given much pleasure and satisfaction to the members and adherents of All Saints, who were very anxious that Rev. Mr. Armitage, who has done so much to the upbuilding of the congregation and the work of the church, should be first Rector.

PIANO FOR Y. M. C. A.

The Ladies Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A. Have Taken the Matter in Hand

At a largely attended meeting of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A., on Thursday afternoon, it was decided to purchase a piano for the hall, and a committee was appointed to take the matter in hand.

Mr. John Manning, President of the Stranger's Fellowship club, adressed the meeting on the work of that branch, and on behalf of the club requested the ladies to establish the holding of stranger's teas once a month in the building. The ladies very cheerfully and unanimously agreed to undertake the work. Mrs. J. Coyle Brown, the efficient treasurer was elected to represent the auxiliary at the convention to be held in Berlin from Jan. 23rd to 26th. A committee was appointed to purchase linen, dishes and cutlery for the social department.

ARTIST'S PROOF

The New and Decidedly Exquisite Photographic Novelty.

There is something new under the sun —in photography—Artist's Proof it is appropriately called.

Everyone is familiar with the time-honoured method of pasting the photograph upon a selected card mount. Right here is where Artist's Proofs depart from the accepted rules of portrait making.

The likeness produced by the Collodio-Carbon process, is printed directly upon parchment paper, the centre of which is embossed to permit a sunken margin to surround the picture, with ample space for a signature. The fascinating density of light and shade in the Carbon, blending, at the edges, into the parchment itself, is a captivating combination; crowned by the Artist's Proof Enclosure, which envelops the entire creation.

In keeping with his well known policy of providing the art-loving public with all that is new, R. M. Roy is now filling orders for Artist's Proof portraits, which will be the reigning success of the season.

See the Artist's Proof display at the entrance of Roy's Studio, 401-3 Hunter Street—then go upstairs and ask questions.

My Dear Sir:—Yours of the 14th inst to hand, and because of business, you will pardon my delay in making reply. I am pleased to note the wonderful success of the Canada Business College, and as my mind goes back to some 18 years ago, and I was then permitted to be one of your students, I wish to assure you with a grateful heart, that I have never regretted the many pleasant and happy days I spent in your school. I say pleasant, because I always found you courteous and kind to all, and happy, because I first learned from you the true principles of a business career and which I was called upon to adopt.

Wishing you every success, I am Sir,
Yours Truly,

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

London Directors, F. Bruch, C. J. Palmer and D. Symons London Secretary H. L. Claridge. The company was registered October 2nd, 1895, under the laws of the Transvaal, and holds upwards of 2,000 claims in the districts of Klerksdorp and Potchefstroom. The authorized capital is £600,000 in shares of £1, of which £500,000 has been issued and paid up. The accounts are made up annually to August 31st, and submitted in Johannesburg about November. In a circular issued in November, 1899, it was stated that the company had then in London cash and liquid assets for £110,000 besides holding 62,000 shares of £1 in the Main Reef West Company, Ltd. No report was received last year but this notice has been officially revised. A register of shares is kept in London.

Advices from London predict a substantial rise in "Klerksdorp", the present price being 15 shillings as against a price of £3 15 s. before the war.

100 shares of this stock at 15 shillings per share—$365.60: 20 per cent of which is $73.12 balances carried at 6 per cent.

We buy and sell either for cash or on 20 per cent margin.

The Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

PATENTED 10TH MARCH, 1894.

For hard or soft coal, coke or peat. The only coal stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

THE STAR is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion———why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces

THE STAR has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica,

After being filled the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

THE STAR is 25 per cent. more economical than any other stove.

More than 5,000 are in use in the lower provinces.

DIRECTIONS

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention.

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room, the size of which is 45 by 33 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other. ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 "Star" stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The "Star" gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal. MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 STAR coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star and it requires a minimum of attention. TIMES PRINTING CO.

INAUGURAL MEETING OF THE TOWN COUNCIL

The Civic Year Opened with Morning and Evening Sessions

MAYOR DENNE ADDRESSES HIS COLLEAGUES

MORNING SESSION

The Town Council held their first meeting in the Council Chamber yesterday morning at eleven o'clock, and filed the required declaration before taking their seats at the Council board for the present year. Those present were: Mayor Denne, Aldermen Clinkscale, Batten, Edgecumbe, Shortly, Rush, McGregor, Turner, Corkery, Morrison, and Best. Alderman Roger is out of town and was the only one absent.

THE MAYOR'S ADDRESS.

Mayor Denne called the meeting to order and delivered his opening address to the Council as follows:

Gentlemen,—Permit me to congratulate you upon your election by the people of Peterborough to the honorable and responsible positions of members of this council. The electors have done us especial honor this year by electing without opposition, and perhaps this honor is especially appreciated by those of us who were members of the Council last year, as it shows in a marked manner that our course during the year met with approval. I do not take this unanimous choice to mean that the electors approved of our every act, but I think we are justified in considering it an expression of opinion that the electors believed the members worked honestly and faithfully in the interests of the town, and not without some measure of success.

The affairs of a municipality of the size of Peterborough always require a great deal of time and attention, even when there are no matters of special importance to be dealt with. The maintenance of the bridges, streets and sidewalks, the keeping of the fire department up to an efficient standard, and the supervision and direction of the many interests of the municipality under the control of the Council, require careful consideration and supervision in order that the work of the departments may be so carried out as to produce the best results with the least expenditure. It is of first importance that there should be no leaks or useless expenditure, for with a municipality, as with any business enterprise, there cannot be waste without injury. Taxes are a burden on the industry and commerce of the town, and any undue burden will with certainty have the effect of checking commerce and industry, and consequently the prosperity and growth of the town. I have no doubt that in all these matters we will be able to co-operate to administer the affairs of the municipality with economy and efficiency, so that all expenditures will be for the benefit of the commity.

There are several matters out of the ordinary course that will also require our best attention. The qualified ratepayers having adopted the By-law to purchase the waterworks, it will now be our duty to give the by-law its final reading and pass on to the carrying out of the purchase. The By-law cannot be read a third time to-day, as sufficient time has not elapsed since the first publication to permit of that being done, and we should meet again in a day or two to pass the by-law. The management of the works will be placed in the hands of commissioners, and I shall lose no time to have the necessary steps taken for their election, so that when the works are taken over the municipal machinery will be ready. But while the Council will be relieved of the responsibility of the management of the works, the disposal of the debentures to pay for them will be our duty, and with such a large amount we will need to carefully consider each step in order that the best sale possible will be made. The municipality is in an exceptionally good financial position, with excellent credit, and with the debentures further secured by being a first lien on the waterworks, there is no reason to doubt that we will readily dispose of them on advantageous terms.

I have again to refer to the subject of protection at railway crossings. The Grand Trunk Railway has not obeyed the order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to establish gates at the crossings at Charlotte and Simcoe Streets, but has instead placed flag men there. While the flagmen are a measure of protection, that is not the kind of protection that was applied for and ordered, and it may be necessary to take steps to have the order complied with and the full measure of protection give, although I hope that the railway company will not make that necessary.

Previous to the late municipal elections I wrote to the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway company pointing out the necessary for protection by means of gates at the George Street crossing, and on the last day of the year I had an interview at Toronto with Mr. Timmerman, the General Superintendent of this Division. Mr. Timmerman did not dispute that protection was needed, but urged that a "Chicago" crossing signal would give adequate protection, and that the town should bear half the expense. Since then I have received a letter from Mr. Timmerman in which he says he is arranging to have a signal placed at the crossing, leaving the matter of expense an open question. I have replied to him that, in view of the circumstances of this crossing, we would not consent to the signal being considered sufficient protection and that the town took the position that it was not liable for any of the expense. I have no doubt, however, that the railway authorities, as they recognize that protection is needed, will see that the means adopted are adequate, and that if the railway's experiment with the signal shows that it does not meet the requirements gates will be substituted, and I hope that by friendly negotiations we will secure what is needed.

For the past eleven or twelve years the town has had an application on file in the Crown Lands Department at Toronto for the lots in the river inside and outside the Canadian Pacific Railway spur line, and year after year efforts have been made to put it through and secure the patent. The older members of the Council will be familiar with these efforts and the number of visits that have been made to Toronto in different years in connection with the matter. Last year this subject was again taken up and pushed to a conclusion. A number of difficulties arose in the way of securing the grant, the last being in connection with the railway spur line. The Government could not give the town any of the land used by the railway company, and thus was unable to give a right of access to the lands outside the railway line. This was the question that led to the lawsuit a couple of years ago with the railway company respecting the island. There was also a question as to the width of the right of way. I had several interviews with the Department and the railway authorities in November and December, the last being on Dec. 31st, when an agreement was reached and drawn up and signed by the solicitors of the town and the railway company, and in accordance with it a patent will be issued. By the arrangement made the town will receive the patent to about fifteen acres, and the railway company will receive a patent of tehir right of way. The Town will also give the railway company a deed of their right of way over the island owned by the town and over which the spur line runs. There will be reservations in the grants to the railway company for streets sixty-six feet wide opposite Sherbrooke, King and Charlotte Streets, so that there will be access to the lands outside the track. As the town owned the two islands, by a title received from the Dominion authorities, it will, with this property now obtained, have a large block of land that will in time be most useful and valuable for various purposes. With the completion of the Trent Canal, which cannot come any too soon for the interests of this town, this land will be valuable for wharfage, and there will be room for a large esplanade that will become more and more valuable as the town grows and its commerce increase. I expect that in a few days the patent for this land will be received. I am sure you will be pleased that this long standing matter has been closed, and in bringing it to a successful close valuable aid was given by Hon. J. R. Stratton.

I believe we can look forward to a year of continued progress and prosperity. The new factories for which buildings are now being erected will have a marked effect upon the growth of the town, and it will be our duty to endeavor to secure further increases to our already large list of successful manufacturing concerns. We, as representatives of the interests of a growing community such as this is, must be prepared to take large views of any propositions that come before us, and at the same time carefully guard the interests of the ratepayers. It is often in connection with comparatively small matters that difficulties arise, and these small matters seem to annoy manufacturers more even than differences on larger questions, and we should so far as possible avoid friction with those who can so largely affect the fortunes of the town. The good will of a manufacturer who has interests throughout the continent is well worth having, and it should be our policy to smooth the way for establishing every facility for manufacturing and the commerce necessarily connected with it, at the same time avoiding injustice to others.

By working together in harmony, agreeing to disagree when necessary without affecting pleasant relations, and keeping in view the welfare of the town, which I feel sure will be the object of every member, we should have a pleasant and successful year.

General business was then taken up, the minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

BYLAWS.

The following bylaws passed their several readings:

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Alderman Clinkscale, moved seconded by Alderman Batten, that Mayor Denne, Aldermen Best, Shortly, Rush and Clinkscale be appointed a committee to strike the standing committees for the year.—Carried.

The Council then adjourned till eight o'clock.

EVENING SESSION

Council met in regular session at eight o'clock, when there were present Mayor T. H. G. Denne and Aldermen Edgecumbe, McGregor, Rush, J. J. Turner, sr., Batten, Morrison, Best, Corkery and Clinkscale.

The minutes of the morning session were read and confirmed.

CHAMBERLAIN ON FOREIGN CRITICS

Says He is Responsible Only to His Sovereign and Country

GOODWILL OF THE COLONIES

Their Opinion Will Have to be Considered in the Future—A New Factor in Politics

Birmingham, Jan. 13.—At a dinner Saturday night, Mr. Chamberlain made a speech, in which he said he regretted the tendency in late years in political life to descend to meanness in attacking personal character. Every possible crime had been imputed to some member of the Government. But in these vituperations there was a great deal of exaggeration and very little sincerity. After six years of excessive strain he would be glad to make way for any of those alternative Governments which had been starring the Provinces, if he were assured that any one of them could deal with great national issues.

Referring to the animosity of foreign nations, he said he was well aware that it was in some quarters attributed to the "indiscreet, oratory of the Colonial Secretary."

WITHDRAWS NOTHING.

"What I have said," continued Mr. Chamberlain, "I have said. I withdraw nothing; I qualify nothing I defend nothing. As I read history, no British Minister has ever served his country faithfully and at the same time been popular abroad. I, therefore, make allowance for foreign criticism. I will not follow the example that has been set me. I do not want to give lessons to a foreign Minister and I will not accept any at his hands. I am responsible only to my Soveriegn and my countrymen.

"I do not depreciate the importance of the good-will of foreign nations, but there is something more important. It is the affection and confidence of our kinsfolk across the sea. Even our great losses in the war that has been forced upon us have brought in their train one blessing of infinite and lasting importance. That was has enabled the British Empire to find itself, and has shown to all whom it may concern that if ever again we have, as in the past, to fight for our very existence against the world in arms, we shall be supported by the sons of Britain in every quarter of the globe.

"How can I," asked Mr. Chamberlain, "be made responsible for what Lord Grey has called 'filthy lies' and what Lord Rosebery described as 'vile infamous falsehoods,' which has been disseminated in foreign countries without a syllable of protest, without the slightest interference by responsible authorities?"

GREAT RESULTS ACHIEVED.

Mr. Chamberlain said that when the present Ministry came into office it was at a time when the country was at peace with the world, but the Cabinet had to meet at least six burning questions of international importance. These legacies which Lord Salisbury had to take up included the Venezuela boundary question, the Samoan difficulty, and the French position on the Nile, all of which the Government successfully grappled and disposed of.

"Our American kinsfolk," continued Mr. Chamberlain, "have agreed to a treaty to enable the construction of an inter-oceanic canal, which I believe will be of great advantage to the commerce of the world, as it will be of great advantage to the United States.

"I might have included the struggle between the Boers and Great Britain for supremacy in South Africa, but I say there are solid achievements in the cause of peace; and if we have been unable to remove Continental prejudice, which has always existed, but was never more coarsely expressed, we have at least been enabled to settle many substantial differences which might have caused international conflict."

CANADA APPRECIATED.

Extolling colonial patriotism, Mr. Chamberlain said: "Only a day or two ago I read in an influential Canadian paper an editorial which declared that the pro-Boers in England were injuring the Empire abroad and destroying the unity which is our national safeguard. This is only a sample of the loyalty expressed in every colony of the Empire. This is a new factor in politics. You must hereafter consult the colonies upon every vital question of imperial politics."

INDUSTRY IN SOUTH AFRICA

War Conditions Are Being Gradually Overcome at the Gold Mines.

London, Jan. 14.—British investors who are interested in the mining industries of south Africa are much gratified at the reports reaching tehm from that region.

For the last six months the mines of the Rand have been in active operation after a period of silence which began shortly after the British occupation of Johannesburg. The rate of production of this gold field for the nine completed months of 1899 was about $100,000,000. During the five months ending with Sept. 30, 202,405 tons of ore were crushed, and, estimating the October crushing at 55,100 tons, would bring the total to 257,505 tons, which has resulted in a yield of 147,021 ounces of gold, with the average value of $3,120,000 per month, which contrasts with $7,610,000, the average monthly value of the output in 1899.

Rhodesia has also made a substantial advance, particularly in the department of irrigation, in the last two years. Moreover trustworthy information received here shows also that the improvement in the industrial situation in South Africa is not confined to the mining industry. It is shown that where military operations have provided reasonably facilities have been given and have been utilized for the reestablishment of civil enterprises. It is pointed out that Lord Kitchener's lines of blockhouses make concentration of boer forces very difficult, but not impossible, and that the resumption of civil activity is gradually spreading itself, protected and developed by the troops who are gradually being released from service and who intend to make their homes permanent in South Africa.

LIGHT ON CZAR'S POLICY IN CHINA

A FIRM GRIP ON MANCHURIA

Confidential Letter of Russian Minister Made Public

Opposed the Foreign Invasion After Boxer outbreak—Talk of "Wolves and Tigers."—Alleged Designs of the Powers on Chinese Territory.

Victoria, Jan. 14.—According to advices from Kai Fang Fu, by the steamer Empress of Japan, a conference was held there before the Chinese court started for Pekin with Prince Ching, at which the Chinese statesman submitted to the Empress Dowager the suggestions of the representatives of Great Britain and the United States at Pekin. The Ministers asked that the heir apparent, Pu Chun, be disinherited; Yung Lu to be kept from the Chinese court, Tung Fu Hsiang be decapitated, and that the so called regency of the Empress Dowager be abolished and the Emperor restored to position. Fearing to present these suggestions to the Empress, Prince Ching demurred for some time, but finally put forward the suggestions, and the Empress Dowager at once agreed to depose Pu Chun and execute Tung Fu Hsiang, but would not agree to remove Yung Lu from her council or resign her regency.

Tung Fu Hsiang is said to be beyond the reach of the Empress Dowager, being at Kawangu, where he is engaged in forming an army to invade North China.

Yung Lu still retains his position as Grand Councillor, and M. Lessar, the Russian Minister, has been making strenuous efforts to secure his appointment as plenipotentiary to settle the Manchurian question.

The Tung Wen Hui Pao publishes the confidential letter addressed to Grand Councillor Yung Lu by M. Lessar immediately after the death of Li Hung Chang. The document is said to have been obtained from Japanese sources, and is as follows:

"As your Excellency is doubtless aware, the territories of our two countries are in touch with each other, and among foreign countries Russia is the nearest neighbor of China, from a geographical point of view. Everything that affects the interests of one fully affects those of the other.

RUSSIA BACKING CHINA.

"In consequence of this, Russia has always looked forward to that day when China may be prosperous and powerful. Unfortunately, the Boxer disturbance broke out last year, and all the foreign Powers took advantage of the occasion to send their hostile armies into China. Though we tried to refrain from participating in the expedition, it was in vain; we labored most strenuously to persuade the the allied forces to evacuate Pekin as soon as the legations had been relieved.

"Subsequently, when the Japanese attempted to snatch the power of policing the city of Pekin from the hands of the Chinese authorities, we stood obstinately in their way, and so their unreasonable attempts were frustrated.

"When all the allied Powers joined together in dictating to China the punishments of those Chinese officials who were suspected by them of having countenanced the Boxers, we exerted every effort to get as many officials exempted from punishment as possible, in order to protect the dignity of your country. It is needless to say that it was entirely due to that strong and persistent opposition that your Excellency was not included in the list. We have tried and done everything in our power to protect the interests of China, and it is for this reason that we have earned the implacable hatred of all the other Powers. He, the late Li Hung Chang, was a very far sighted and able statesman, who had always been on friendly terms with us, because he knew that Russia was the only true friend of China.

"WOLVES AND TIGERS."

"With regard to Manchuria, it is a place where the present dynasty had its origin. How can the Chinese Government permit a number of wolves and tigers to intrude into this important province of the Chinese Empire? We knew that unless we stepped forward China would be powerless against those wolves and tigers. We, therefore, made haste in despatching a strong army southward to protect this province from being invaded by the other Powers, and our action in this matter has had its desired effect, for by our strenuous and prompt efforts peace and order have been gradually restored through Manchuria, and no foreign Power has dared to touch the province. Thus the sovereignty of China in the province has been maintained.

CZAR'S GRIP IN MANCHURIA.

"As general peace has been restored and the court is about to return to the old capital, it appears reasonable that we should hand back Manchuria to its proper owner, to quiet the minds who are inclined to suspect that Russia is aiming at absorbing and annexing this important territory. But, after careful consideration, we find that it is not all opportune for us to do so now. This reason is obvious, for China is newly defeated and saddled with the burden of an unprecedented indemnity; it is not within her power to raise sufficient funds and maintain a strong army in Manchuria to defend it.

"But unless Manchuria is strongly garrisoned, it is impossible to prevent foreign Powers from casting a greedy eye on the province. It is for this reason that Russia insists on keeping this important territory under her control until China shall be strong enough to take it back. If we disregard the welfare of China and evacuate at the present moment, I am sure that no sooner have our troops left the place than those of some foreign Power will step in and make a permanent occupation. This statement, I hope, will be a sufficient explanation why we refuse to give up Manchuria now.

MOTIVES OF FOREIGN POWERS.

"With reference to the convention as agreed upon between the late Li Hung Chang and us, it is a satisfactory document in every respect. But, unfortunately, it has been frustrated by that plenipotentiary's regrettable death, and those who have been authorized to take up this important work left off by him are ignorant of the political situation and misunderstand our good intentions. Instead of consolidating the indispensable relations between China and her nearest neighbor, Russia, these men are seeking the friendship and alliance of such far distant Power as Japan and England. I need hardly say that your Excellency will be at one with me in condemning their stupidity. I hope you will describe the situation to her Majesty, the Empress Dowager, and persuade her to put the Manchurian affair in your hands, that I may negotiate with you alone. This, in my opinion, is the only way to prevent the province from falling into the hands of foreign Powers."

ITEMS OF INTEREST

Pekin, Jan. 14.—The signing of the edict ordering Gen. Tung Fu Hsiang's execution is taken to indicate that he is responsible for the recent outrages in the Province of Kansu, and also that more is happening than the Chinese officials make public.

M. Beau, the French Minister, fears that the entire Belgian mission at Mingheis, numbering about eighteen persons, with many converts, have been massacred.

It is stated that the death sentence imposed on Tung Fu Hsiang was approved at the audience given yesterday by the Dowager Empress to the Grand Council. It is reported that Tung Fu Hsiang was inveigled into the yamen at Ninghsia, where he was arrested.

STRICKEN WITH SMALLPOX.

Mr. and Mrs. Yates, Well Known Here Have the Disease

Mr. and Mrs. O. Yates, who spent several weeks in Peterborough as guests at one of our leading hotels, have been stricken with smallpox at Cornwall. Mr. Yates and some other parties were canvassing for a firm which enlarges portraits, and arrived at Cornwall from Ottawa, where he contracted the disease. The local authorities at once quarantined the hotel, and placed a couple of special constables on guard to prevent any-one from entering or leaving the house. The patients were isolated along with Dr. McLaren, who had been attending them. Dr. Hodgetts of the Provincial Board of Health, authorised the removal of the patients to the smallpox hospital north east of the town, but Mrs. Yates was too ill to be moved.

Besides the proprietor's family and servants there are half a dozen young fellows quarantined in the Carleton House, and they are having a high old time, giving a continuous performance of some kind or other. They have the windows and porch of the house covered with original placards and there is very little time during the day that they have not a crowd parleying with them from the sidewalk.

BOER OFFICERS ARE PRISONERS OF BRITISH

Colonel Wing's Column Captures Wolmarans and Other Officers

CAPTURED BOERS WORTH THEIR WEIGHT IN GOLD

British Mathematician Makes an Ingenious Calculation — Lord Milner on Question of Navtive Labor

London, Jan. 13.—Major Wolmarans and two other officers of the famous Staats Artillery were captured by Colonel Wing at Boschman's Krail, 20 miles from Ermelo, last Saturday. Wolmarans was regarded as a capable Boer officer and he has given the British a great deal of trouble since the commencement of the war. He is a relation by marriage of former President Kruger.

A CALCULATION.

London, Jan. 13.—Writing in the Speaker, an ingenious mathematician calculates that every Boer captured or killed before the end of the war will be worth his weight in gold. Assuming that the Boer army proper contained originally about 22,870 men, averaging in weight 150 pounds, and accepting Lloyd George's estimate that the war will eventually cost England some £400,000,000, he makes the discovery that the whole of the original Transvaal army might have been weighed out in the scales and barely equalled the weight in gold which will be required before they are all led into death or captivity.

Johannesburg, Jan. 12.—During his recent important speech before the civil banquet Lord Milner dwelt at considerable length on the question of native labor. He was pleased to note the great improvement in the condition of the negroes, brought about by the introduction of English Government. For years before the war native wages ruled from forty to sixty shillings a month, but they were subject to many deductions, and a Government tax of two shillings monthly. Now no taxes were imposed, and there were no deductions, in addition to which the liquor traffic, which ate up the Kaffir's wages, and ruined him physically, had been completely stopped. Lord Milner added that he expected when the country was settled, the native intelligent and fairly governed, and the Rhodesian railways were opened into the teeming interior, there would be a sufficient labor supply without it being necessary to import Asiatics.

London, Jan. 14.—A few days ago the Anglo-Boer war will have been going on just two years and three months. And this is what it has cost Great Britain up to this time:

Total deaths from all causes	19,430
Total sent home as invalids	64,330
Total expenditures to end of fiscal year	$750,000,000

Even if the conquest of the two Republics were complete to-day, Great Britain would have paid nearly $5000 per square mile for the 153,500 square miles of the annexed South African territory, and more than one British soldier has been killed, maimed or invalided for every Boer soldier put in the field.

Perhaps this is not a price that "staggers humanity," but it is certainly one that staggers the British people.

THE CHARITY BOARD

A Resolution of Regret at the Retirement of Ven Archdeacon Casey

The Charity Board met yesterday afternoon, when there were present Messrs. J. J. McBain, Vice-President; Fowler, Miller, Stock, Buller, Batten, Rush and Kemp.

A number of accounts were dealt with, and Mr. McBain reported the purchase of wood as follows: ten cords dry cedar at $2 per cord and thirty cords of dry hardwood, sawed in four ft. lengths, at $4.55 per cord.

A BROAD-MINDED GENTLEMAN.

Moved by J. J. McBain, seconded by H. Rush,—That this Board has learned with regret that the Ven. Archdeacon Casey is about to leave Peterborough; he having been connected with this Board since its organization and a faithful and most useful member. Archdeacon Casey has shown, while a member of this Board, that he is a broad-minded gentleman, one who is most charitably inclined, and at the same time judicious and careful, and his counsel has been of great service to the Board. While regretting his removal, we wish him well in the charge to which he is going.—Carried.

Two Beautiful Pictures

The holiday number of The Canadian Housekeeper contains two beautiful supplements, "Fruit and Flowers" (in 15 colors,) and "Mother and Child;" also an excellent full page engraving of Ella Wheeler Wilcox. These pictures are suitable for framing and are fit for any parlor. The enterprise shown by the publishers in giving such excellent and costly specimens of Canadian art is commendable, and they are succeeding admirably in their aim to provide Canadian Women with a home magazine on Culinary and House hold Art better than the best elsewhere. The forty odd pages in this magazine contain many excellent illustrated articles on home management and economical housekeeping. Mrs. S. T. Torer and Miss Anna Fraser look after the cooking for the holidays, while articles also appear on Health, Decoration, Home Hints, Laundry, Household Art, Sick-Room Cookery and Candy-Making. Many of the best authorities in England, United States and Canada on Cookery, Health, Child Training and Home Management have been secured and will contribute articles from month to month in The Canadian Housekeeper. Two of the articles which appear in the next issue will be "Bread-Making," by Mrs. C. F. Picton-Godden, London, Eng., and "Suggestions for Weddings," by Mrs. Oliver Bell Bunce. There is no better gifts for a young woman for 1902 than a year's subscription to this excellent Canadian magazine. One dollar per year, 10 cents a copy, at all book stores. Canadian Housekeeper Pub. Co., Toronto.

Why Catarrhozone Cures Catarrh

It goes to every effected part and kills the germs that keep up the diseased condition. WEATHER NOTES.

The cold now prevailing in Ontario and Quebec is unlikely to become more severe; in fact more moderate weather is indicated for to-day. The Northwest Territories have remained unusually mild, and Manitoba is turning milder again.

ASHBURNHAM COUNCIL

The Inaugural Meeting of the Ashburnham Council Held Last Night

The inaugural meeting of the council of the Village of Ashburnham was held in the Town Hall last night. The following members filed the necessary declaration of qualification and took their seats at the Board: Reeve J. H. Smith, and Councillors Adams, Sheridan, Johnston and Pollock.

The Reeve made his opening address in which he reviewed the satisfactory progress of the village for the past year and outlined some improvements which would be considered by the council for the present year. Two very important things he considered was the laying of permanent walks and having the houses and lots in the village numbered. After further remarks by the reeve the council took up general business.

The minutes of the previous meeting of the council were read and confirmed.

Communications were received from Messrs. A. McCarthy, Thos. Bridgewater, and George McWilliams, applying for the position of assessor.

Coun. Pollock moved, seconded by Coun. Adams, that T. Q. Quartermaine and Jas. Drain be appointed auditors at a salary of $8 each.—Carried.

Coun. Adams moved, seconded by Coun. Pollock, that all applications for positions, except auditors, be referred to Committee of the Whole, to report at the next meeting of the council.—Carried.

Communication from the Otonabee Power Co., asking permission to place a pole line down Douro street, to Driscoll to Elizabeth, and along Elizabeth st. to Hunter st. bridge.—Received.

Coun. Adams moved, seconded by Coun. Sheridan, that the application of the Otonabee Power Co. be referred to Committee of the Whole, and that the village solicitor be invited to be present.—Carried.

Coun. Adams moved, seconded by Coun. Johnston, that a grant of $10 be given to the Sick Children's Hospital, Toronto and that the Treasurer be authorized to remit that amount to them.—Carried.

Coun. Johnston moved, seconded by Coun. Pollock that we send for six copies of the Municipal World for 1902, and that an order be drawn on the Treasurer for the amount of $5.—Carried.

The following accounts were received:—

T. B. Manisco	$ 2 60
Welter Stocker	3 60
Peterboro Review Pub. Co.	11 35
B. Hicks & Co.	2 50
Postage and stationery	6 00
Village Clerk, election expenses	4 00

Coun. Johnston moved, seconded by Coun. Sheridan that the above accounts be paid.—Carried.

AN OYSTER SUPPER.

After the Ashburnham Council adjourned last night, the genial reeve, Mr. J. H. Smith, extended an invitation to the members of the council, the civic officers of the municipality and the press representatives, to an oyster supper, at his residence on Stewart street, where they were most hospitably entertained. After giving careful attention to the good things provided, under which the table fairly groaned a most enjoyable time was spent in social intercourse. The party broke up at a late hour and voted the genial reeve and his able assistant, Mrs. Smith, to be a most genial host and hostess. The event will long be remembered by those present as one of the most enjoyable and successful affairs ever attended in the village.

Rev. Father McColl Honored

After the service at St. Martin's church, Ennismore, on Sunday, the parishioners took occasion to present Rev. Father McColl with a collection of books, a well filled purse and an affectionate address.

Father McColl leaves in a few days to assume the duties of Rector at St. Peter's Cathedral, town.

The Care of Roads

The most perfect system of roads in the world is that of France. Its essential features are: First, stone roads; second, engineering superintendence; third, a constant attendant for each three or four miles of road. Neither of the first two can give satisfactory results without the last. The last can give satisfactory results without the others. It is, in fact, the essential basis of the whole system.

The French system was not a slow development, but was forced by the Emperor Napoleon upon his unwilling subjects. The people soon learned to appreciate its value, however, in spite of its expense.

To introduce such a system here would require years of education, years of agitation and legislation. The better way is to attempt to grow into a similar system in a natural manner, adopting first that which is most essential and at the same time easiest to obtain. Railways and railway systems have not been built in a day. They are natural developments, a cheap line being first constructed and gradually perfected by expert attendants, as traffic requires. It would be folly for a railway company to build a well-appointed road and then leave it to take care of itself. It would be even more foolish for us to build good roads, trusting that the necessity for maintenance would afterwards develop a satisfactory system of maintenance. We have shown that we cannot take care of poor roads; why should we then be entrusted with good ones?—Municipal World.

Speak Well of Your City

It ought to be every man's pleasure to speak well of the place in which he lives; to convey the idea always that his city or town is the best. If we knew of any city better we should lose no time in getting away from here. Not knowing any better place to go, it becomes our duty as a citizen of Grand Rapids to speak well of this town and its people. Talk is said to be cheap, but if every man and woman would resolve to speak well of the city to everybody he or she might meet, this fact alone would be the most valuable advertising this city could get. In fact, the only way to build up any community, is to show to others that you have faith in it yourself. How many of you expect a man or woman to come and locate in Grand Rapids for any purpose whatever, if you show him or her that you yourself have no confidence in your own city. In your talk and in your correspondence speak well of everything that pertains to Grand Rapids, her industries, her resources and her people. Cities nowadays do not build themselves, but it is within the province of the people of Grand Rapids —the rank and file —to make or build one of the best cities in Wisconsin right here. All that is necessary is push, energy and enterprise and a disposition to convey to others that this is a good place, the best in the world. If we should all adopt that policy it would be surprising to us all what the results would be in a very short time.—Wood County Reporter.

An Eagle's Nest.

THOSE who seek to rob birds' nests sometimes repent of their deed, especially if the bird happens to be an eagle as fierce as those on the California coast. These birds are seldom shot, and consequently they have increased in numbers; but the eggs are in demand by collectors, and a few adventurous spirits make a business of trying to secure them. Mr. C. F. Holder tells in the New York "Commercial Advertiser" of an adventure where two egg-hunters had a trying experience, and the eagles came off victorious.

The nest was on a rocky pinnacle, perhaps one hundred feet in height, completely separated from the shore. In storms the waves rose, a splendid mass of foam, to the very summit. The base was covered with kelp, and the waves would rise eight or ten feet, then as suddenly drop away, leaving jagged points upon which a boat would be hung until overwhelmed by the next wave.

One quiet day the men approached. They rowed about the rock for ten minutes, then, the sea being level, rushed at it. With all their care, however, the boat was dashed on a ledge, and they found themselves prisoners on the rock with nothing to eat——the provisions having been lost overboard—and the bottom of the boat crushed in.

They rescued a rope and a can of water, and being still determined to try for the eggs, they turned their attention to the nest, allaying their uneasiness by the thought that some passing yacht would take them off.

The rock, however, proved slippery from long accumulation of guano, and the men found it impossible to climb nearer than forty feet from the nest.

One of the adventurers decided to attempt that last forty feet after the fashion adopted by South Pacific natives in climbing trees. A long rope, doubled, with a stone attached to the doubled end, was hurled over the rock so that it fell on the other side, thus encircling it. Then the egg-hunter began climbing barefooted, not going up, but gradually circling the pillar and hitching the rope upward.

In one circuit of the rock he had gained ten or twelve feet, and the footing was growing better. The second brought him twenty-five feet up. He was reaching down to raise the rope when he heard a cry from his companion, and then came a sharp whistling sound, a rush, and something filled the air in front of him, striking fierce blows and throwing him from his feet, so that he hung for a second by the rope, faint and bewildered.

It was the mother eagle, that had plunged down upon him from a great height. She was driven off for a time by the man below, who hit her squarely on the breast with a stone.

The hunter, still undaunted, proceeded to climb, this time with his knife between his teeth. When he was within five feet of the top the former experience was repeated.

A short, sharp fight ensued. The bird fell away, but immediately returned. The man struck at it with his knife, missed it, and then, while one of its claws was fastened in his clothing, lost his balance and fell against the rope. The rope broke, and bird and man went plunging into the sea.

The fact that the bird's talon had caught in his clothing saved the hunter's life, for the eagle, as soon as it struck the water, began to try to fly, and actually helped the man out of the kelp bed into which he had fallen. Then by its struggles it freed itself, and the hunter swam to the rock.

All thought of securing the eggs was now abandoned. The boat proved to be damaged beyond repair, and the men spent a miserable night in a crevice of the rock, the sea rising all around them. Late on the following day they were rescued by a passing boat.

OBITUARY.

Mr. Thos. B. Shannon, of Douro, Succumbs to Pneumonia

Mr. Thos. B. Shannon, a well known and highly respected resident of Douro, died at his residence, at an early hour on Saturday morning. About three weeks ago deceased was stricken with pneumonia, and despite all that could be done death came at an early hour in the morning. Deceased was a son of the late Richard Shannon and was forty-two years of age. He resided all his lifetime on the farm on which he was born with the exception of about five years. He married Miss Petrie, daughter of Mr. James Petrie, of Otonabee, who with two children, is left to mourn the death of a kind and loving husband and father. Deceased was a member of the Foresters also of the Orange Order, he was also a member of St. Paul's congregation.

Friends will regret his death and will sympathize with the bereaved children in their loss.

The funeral took place yesterday at 1 o'clock p.m., from his late residence, lot 3, con. 8, Douro, and proceeded to the Little Lake cemetery for interment.

DIED AT THE HOSPITAL

The Little Son of Mr. Harry Kavanagh Succumbs to Diphtheria

Mr. Harry Kavanagh will have the sympathy of his friends in the sad loss he met with on Saturday, in the death of his little son, Teddy, which occurred at St. Joseph's hospital, from diphtheria. He was about five years of age, and was an exceedingly bright and winsome child, and his death will be severely felt by those to whom he was dear. The funeral took place yesterday from the hospital to the Roman Catholic cemetery.

UNREASONABLE WOMEN.

These women are most unreasonable. One of them objects in a local print because men past 60 continue to admire young women, and a bride of 87 down "in Indianny" has left her 90-year-old husband, after three months of wedded life, because he was flirtatious. We don't see why the young men should have all the pleasure there is in life. There certainly couldn't be anything more harmless than a 90-year-old flirt, while a well-balanced man ought not to get so old he can't admire a lovely woman — though he shouldn't get gay.

The Art of Self-Defense.

The popular idea expressed in the phrase, "the art of self-defense," shows the opinion that the chief enemies a man has to defend himself from are visible and external. But the real danger of every man is from minute and often invisible foes. In the air we breathe and the water we drink are countless minute organisms leagued against the health of the body.

The one defense against these enemies is to keep the blood pure. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery thoroughly purifies the blood, removing poisonous substances and accretions. When the blood is pure there is no harborage for the germs of disease which find a lodging only when the blood is impure and corrupt.

"I consider your 'Golden Medical Discovery' one of the best medicines on the face of the earth," writes Mr. Wm. Plester, of Redoak, Montgomery Co., Iowa. "While in the southwest, three years ago, I got poisoned with poison ivy. The poison settled in my blood and the horrors I suffered cannot be told in words. I thought I would go crazy. I tried different kinds of medicine, tried different doctors, but all the relief they could give me was to make my pocket-book lighter. I then began taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Took four bottles without relief. Kept taking it. I took in all ten bottles and got entirely cured."

THE city council of Milwaukee is considering the purchase of a dredge and pile driver by the city. The city is to do all of its work of dredging the river and its dock building and repairing. The resolution which has been prepared recites that the city is at the present at the mercy of the dredging trust and that the work to be done on the river and harbor is as necessary as the work done on the streets.

MUNICIPAL fire insurance is soon to be tried in the city of Galena, Miss. Excessive high rates of the local companies have made this step necessary. Its advocates claim that double the amount of insurance could be carried by an expenditure equal to that now required and a sufficient profit still remain to pay the city for its trouble.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows at 130th street, New York. I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the 1st of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully,
O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle and I am ever grateful. I have a family of four children and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

CHAPTER XI.

To Lady Blanche Belair's great delight, Miss Mostyn suddenly renounced the idea of paying the visit to her friend with the handsome penniless brother, and declared her intention of going direct to Brexley Hall instead.

"I forgot all about my birthday when I promised Maude I would go to her. Of course I must be at Brexley on the tenth. My people would be very greived about it if I disappointed them."

Barbara was fond of alluding to the parish and village around her home as "my people," there was a fine sounding ring in the words that she liked. She had often made Ormande smile and then wince at this petty assumption of sovereignty.

It was not the premature departure of Lord Otway from Maple Tree House that had alone influenced Barbara in her desire to end her stay in Northminster, too; she was absolutely devoid of sympathy, and the sight of poor, pale, deformed Marian Adair, sitting in the garden or drawing-room, with the patient suffering dwelling in her large eyes, annoyed and depressed her.

Lady Blanche, too, was not so amusing since the news of this nephew's disappearance had come.

"One might as well be with a parcel of mutes!" Miss Mostyn declared, ill-temperedly, to herself, after she had struggled through a week of this "and since Lord Otway evidently does not intend to return, I don't see what occasion there is for me to stay any longer. Upon my word, I think I did a very foolish thing when I cut myself out of Goodwood and Cowes simply to come down here and be bored and disappointed."

And then she called sharply to her two maids —Miss Mostyn could not possibly travel without two women to wait on her —and ordered them to pack her voluminous wardrobe into the half-dozen immense imperials which always heralded her approach when visiting. To Lady Blanche, however, Barbara was sweetness itself.

"I cannot say how grieved I am to leave you, dear Lady Blanche, especially now you are so troubled; and were it not for my duties, I should beg you to keep me a little longer; but," with a plaintive sigh, "you see how I am placed, don't you? I never miss being at Brexley on my birthday; it is a general holiday, and my people expect to see me there on such an occasion."

To this, of course, Lady Blanche made some pleasant reply, though she could not repress a smile at the girl's infallible belief in herself and her marvelous conceit.

"You will write to me, Barbara, of course?" she said as she kissed the girl, "and tell me all your plans. I suppose you will not stay long at Brexley?"

"It all depends," replied Barbara, with another sigh. "I generally find I am wanted in a hundred directions and Aunt Mildred is not of the slightest use. I only hope this new companion may turn out well. You know I wrote up to Aunt Ellen and asked her to engage some one for me, and this morning I received a hurried note informing me she had found the very person who, if all accounts be true, is a perfect paragon of perfection!"

"Yes, but too impressionable. Her swans are almost always very common geese, and I expect this Miss Brereton will be no exception to the rule," and then Miss Mostyn was driven away with her French maid, her English one having gone on in advance with the luggage.

"Yes, I have been a fool," she communed. "I have undoubtedly lost Sir Henry Bracy by not going to Goodwood or Cowes, and my time has been simply wasted here. It was not so bad at the beginning. Ormande certainly was most attentive, but he changed toward the end," she bit her lip savagely. "It almost seemed as if another woman had come to the scene; but how and where?"

Nothing had ever thwarted her will before, and it was not likely she would give in now. "If he will not come forward —well, a woman's wit is keen, and I can find some means to bring him, that is all!" she mused.

But though the sense of her power gave her some satisfaction, the fact that she had failed so far was not a soothing reflection, and both her patient, hard-worked maids were scolded and harried throughout the journey till they were nearly worn out.

"But mon Dieu, what have arrived?" whispered Olympe in despair to her fellow servant Murray, who could only shake her head and declare "that she'd never come across such a one as Miss Mostyn for temper, no, never in all her born days!"

* * *

Katharine was not long in driving from Brexley Station to the Hall. She inhaled the sweet air with pleasure, for it came fresh after only one day spent in London.

The coachman pointed out the various objects of interest as they went. After they had left the village with its Gothic-built cottages, almshouses, school and church behind, they arrived at some lodge gates of massive ironwork, surmounted by griffins bearing a gigantic escutcheon with the Mostyn coat of arms.

"All this were built by Miss Mostyn afore the squire went, miss," the coachman told Katharine, as he pointed with his whip to the high stone wall that ran down from either side of the gate. "It's to shut in the park like and keep it to its selfun."

"Oh, what a pity!" Katharine exclaimed. "It quite spoils the view, that tall, ugly wall! I wonder how any one could have built it."

"Miss Mostyn seemed to want it like, and so she did it, miss."

Katharine was silent as the great gates were opened, and then she was driven through the avenue of beech trees up to the hall, a large turreted mansion, bearing here and there evidence of the builder's hand.

"Miss Brereton," she asked, respectfully; "would you like to see Mrs. Trevanion now, miss, or wait till you have had a cup of tea?"

"I think now, if you please."

Lady Drummond had told her who Mrs. Trevanion was, and Katharine recalled an undoubted touch of contempt that had rung in Lady Drummond's voice when she had spoken of Miss Mostyn's other aunt and present chaperone.

"I will have your box carried up to your room, miss, at once, and will you come this way, please?"

Katharine followed the housekeeper down a marble paved hall —in which a scented fountain was playing in a marble basin, and huge palms and ferns were clustered together — until they came to a passage which Katharine saw ran to right and left of the hall. At the end of the one they were traversing was a conservatory, and through that a large room.

Into this Mrs. Parsons, the housekeeper, ushered Katharine.

"Miss Brereton, ma'am," she said, and a tall, faded, elegant woman rose from a writing table and came to meet the girl.

"Miss Brereton, Parsons?" she asked, in tones of faint surprise, then as if recollecting herself, "Oh, of course, you are the" —she was about to say "young person," but a glance at Katharine somehow checked this term —"the young lady sent down by Lady Drummond, as companion for Miss Mostyn; you must pardon my forgetfulness, but I was just engaged in writing a most important letter. Miss Mostyn is not here now, she returns to-morrow, er— has Parsons shown you your rooms, Miss Brereton? Er—er, perhaps you would prefer to dine alone there this evening, it——"

"I will do whatever is most convenient," said Katharine, coldly, feeling that she should not get on very well with this faded, drawly woman who treated her with a mixture of indifference and patronage that was extremely disagreeable to bear.

"Oh! Ah! Yes," observed Mrs. Trevanion, in her turn wishing Lady Drummond had been at the bottom of the sea before she had sent this patrician girl to come down here, and, in all probability, oust her, Mrs. Trevanion, from her most comfortable position, and rob her of the sundry perquisites that Barbara was in the habit of giving her from time to time. "Then, Parsons, please have Miss Brereton's dinner sent to her room. Er—that is all I think."

And returning to her letter, without uttering one of the ordinary civil speeches, such as —"Might she give Katharine some tea?" "Was she tired?" "Would she like anything?" etc., Mrs. Trevanion took up her pen and let the girl go away again in silence. Even the housekeeper seemed to feel something was wrong as she glanced at Katharine's pale, proud, beautiful face.

"Oh! dearie me," she thought to herself; "this will never answer, I am sure. She's a deal too pretty and it won't do to have any pride with Miss Barbara to deal with. I'm sorry for her, too. She is a lady, any one can see, if it's only by her sweet-spoken manner!"

Katharine uttered a pretty word of thanks as they finished climbing stairs at last.

"Indeed, I think I shall be more than comfortable here, Mrs. Parsons. Lady Drummond was telling me how cozy you made everybody.."

The housekeeper's broad face flushed.

"Her ladyship always has a kind word, miss, and that I'm sure is what you have, too. Now, I shall send you up a cup of tea —no, it is no trouble, it's a pleasure, miss, and I can see by your face that you need it badly. You can use this door, miss, if you want to get on to the other staircase which leads down to the garden; you might like to take a turn there by and by."

Katharine thanked the woman warmly and gave her one of her sweet smiles, and then when she was alone she stood at one of the windows and gazed out at the park grounds below. Two tears welled up in her eyes and rolled down her cheeks, but she dashed them away resolutely.

"I am not going to think," she said to herself. "I will not —I must not think any more!"

And when the maid brought up the tea tray, with some delicious smelling cakes, she found Miss Brereton busy unpacking her modest trunk and arranging her things in the wardrobe and cupboards.

"Mrs. Parsons says, as she will send up your dinner at seven o'clock, if that will suit you; it is five now."

By the time her clothes were put away, Katharine was tired; and flinging herself in a large chair by the open window, she fell, before she was aware of it, into a deep, dreamless sleep, from which she was aroused by the entrance of Patty, this time bearing her dinner.

Katharine ate but little. She had an invalid's appetite as yet, but she talked to the maid; and then, wrapping a shawl about her, went down the staircase that led to the gardens to get a breath of fresh air before she sought her couch.

"The stairs is steep, like; you'll be careful, miss, as you go, won't you?" said Patty, anxiously, noticing Katharine's weakness and limp; and then nothing would do but she must go down first and show the way.

It was a glorious evening, and Katharine's soul seemed to revive as the fragrant, warm air kissed her face and ruffled her hair. She felt she scarcely knew why, as if she had reached some haven. Here she was, safe at any rate from the sight of Gordon Smythe. There was nothing to recall the hideous past; it was all new and strange, while the knowledge that here lived the woman whom Ormande, Lord Otway, loved must soon help to crush down the folly, the mad, hungry longing, the boundless, hopeless love which he had inspired in Katharine's heart.

Yes, yes, it must! Love could not live on in the face of such circumstances. She would grow accustomed to hear him spoken off in terms of proprietorship. She would grow used to thinking of him as Barbara Mostyn's future husband; she would be able to meet him as an ordinary acquaintance; even friendship with him must be denied her; would he not shrink from her, if he could but know the truth? Would he not recoil with a shudder from her touch? Katharine reared her head proudly. So let it be, better that they should be strangers; he——

But all at once she stopped in her slow, painful walk; just beside her was a rose tree burdened and bent with the weight of its own blossoms, and as the rich scent of the flowers stole into her senses she gave a broken cry.

"Oh, my love, my dearest love, and I flung away your gift to be trodden under foot; your hands have held them; who knows, your lips, may have touched them, and I—I flung them away! Oh, if I could go back and find them! If I might gather them to my heart and treasure them, my love!—my love that can never be mine!"

From which it will be seen that Katharine, poor girl, like many another sorrowful soul before her, might plot and plan to kill her love — might, with proud resolve boldly try to crush it out, yet the flame rushed up again undaunted, and with strong defiance threatened to live as long as life itself should last.

CHAPTER XII.

Katharine was seated writing at her window, late in the afternoon of the next day, when the sounds of bustle and carriage wheels warned her that the mistress of the house had arrived, and that before long she would be face to face with the woman whom, against all the strength of her sweet nature, Katharine could not even recall without that deep, jealous pang at her heart.

"Have I done well to come here?" she said half wearily, as she folded up the letter she had written to Lucy Smythe, and inclosed it in an envelope to the lodging-house keeper in London, who, for a small remuneration, had undertaken to receive and post these communications with her cousin, and moreover keep her whereabouts secret into the bargain. "Would it not have been better to have gone away altogether, across the seas into a strange land? Here there is always the dread, the loathing and fear of meeting Gordon; there is the awful prospect that some clew may be found, his guilt may be traced, and I—I shall be forced to stand up before the world as his wife! Oh!"

Katharine hid her ashen white face in her hands. Never had the memory of her connection with Gordon struck so horribly upon her as now; now, when every fibre— every nerve —in her heart was given up to another, and such another!

"What torture it would be to see him shrink from me, to know that I was disgraced, debased, dishonored in his sight forever!"

She had her two elbows planted on the table, and her face buried in her hands, when a sharp knock came to the door.

Katharine uttered a summons to enter, and a girl in a traveling-gown, fresh from the tailor's hands, bearing herself very stiffly, with a set, rather supercilious look on her face, stood in the doorway.

"How d'ye do, Miss Brereton?" she said, walking in and glancing first at Katharine, sharply and coldly, and then around the room, taking in at once the slight but unmistakable touches of prettiness that had already been effected. "I hope you are comfortable here, and—er— that you are better. Lady Drummond, I presume, made every arrangement with you that was necessary. You understand all I shall require you to do, I suppose?"

"Am I addressing Miss Mostyn?" asked Katharine, rising and looking across at the pretty, consequential, mean face opposite, with her marvelous gray eyes.

Barbara bowed.

"Yes, I am Miss Mostyn. You look very pale, Miss Brereton; I hope you are not delicate; Lady Drummond mentioned something about country air, but——"

"I am quite strong," Katharine said very proudly and coldly. "Will you kindly tell me what you wish me to do, Miss Mostyn? I am anxious to set about my duties at once."

"I wish you to come down stairs and write a number of invitations for my fete on the tenth." Barbara was eyeing the tall, graceful form with no pleasant feelings— this dark-haired, dark-browed, pure-skinned girl was a distinct and most uncomfortable revelation to her. For once she was obliged to confess, most unwillingly, that this swan Lady Drummond had sent was a swan indeed, and no imposture. "They have given you a nice room, I see," she observed, coolly walking round and scrutinizing the few portraits and pictures Katharine had placed on her mantelshelf and walls, and then she uttered an exclamation of surprise. "Why this is the Duc d'Avignon!" She turned abruptly to Katharine. "It is the duc, is it not? I suppose this is his brother who is taken with him? Did you buy this photograph in England, Miss Brereton, may I ask?"

A faint color stole into Katharine's cheeks.

"The duc gave me the portrait himself; that is my father who is taken with him; they were great friends."

"A friend of the Duc d'Avignon and yet taking a situation as a companion! There must be something wrong with her," she thought quickly and enviously, for Barbara had tried in vain during the past season to creep into the charmed circle of which the Duc d'Avignon was one of the shining lights, and the very idea of this girl, a "common companion," speaking of such a celebrated man as a friend was gall and wormwood to her.

Like most narrow-minded, mean-natured people, she at once began to seek for a reason for Katharine being in her present position.

"Ah, yes," she observed, with a drawl, "Aunt Ellen said something about your father being in some profession or other. The duc is so absurdly generous to those beneath him in rank; he is Quixotic to a degree; but I suppose like the run of such exalted, eccentric people, he soon forgets his humble friends?"

By this last speech Barbara wanted to discover whether Katharine ever heard or saw anything of the duc now, but she failed most thoroughly. Katharine only drew up her tall figure with an involuntary gesture of pride, and let her eyes rest for one moment, full of undisguised contempt, on the girl before her; then, in tones as cold as ice, she said:

"I am quite ready to write your invitations, Miss Mostyn, if you will give me your instructions."

Barbara's cheeks flushed angrily, and she drew her thin lips still tighter across her teeth.

"So she is going in for pride so early, is she!" she said to herself. "Well, we shall see— we shall see!"

Then, going to the door with something of a swagger in her gait, Barbara turned.

"Kindly follow me to the library and in future, remember, you are to sit in that room, except when I don't require you, Brereton. I hope you will make no mistake."

German Etiquette.

THE visitor in Germany is often embarrassed by the superfluity of titles, which seem to be showered indiscriminately. The Germans are great sticklers for the dignity of station, and William H. Dawson, in "German Life in Town and Country," shows how actions of law have been instituted because of the withholding of titles rightfully acquired.

Mr. A. must be spoken of as Mr. Court Councillor A., Doctor B. as Mr. Privy Councillor Professor Doctor B. And wives must share their husbands' privileges, and be addressed as Mrs. Court Councillor A. and Mrs. Privy Councillor B.

The English "reverend" has no equivalent, but the clergyman becomes Mr. Pastor So and So. Mr. Brown, the editor, is addressed as Mr. Editor Brown, and on the same principle we have Mr. Stamp-Collector Jones, Mr. Postmaster Robinson, Mr. Road-Inspector Smith, and so on.

You address a lady whom you know but slightly as "Gracious lady" or "Gracious mademoiselle," as she may be married or single. "Obedient servant" is still a gallant greeting where the acquaintance is slight or where a lady is saluted; and it should be remembered that to salute first in public is not the prerogative of the German lady.

The superficial side of courtesy as seen in letter-writing is simply allowed to run riot. Here is the beginning of an official letter which a person of educated rank may any day receive, to his lasting edification:

"To his highly well-born Herr Doctor (for the doctor may be taken for granted). The undersigned permits himself devotedly to inform your highly well-born self that your honored writing has received, and so forth." And the writer may in conclusion assure the highly well-born recipient of his "most excellent high esteem," and subscribe himself as "highly respectful and most obedient."

Most people insist on receiving the exact degree of respect which they deem to be due to their position, as the pronouncement of a Berlin jury indicates. A lady accused a tradesman of an intended insult in that he had only signed himself in a letter "Most humbly" and not "Respectfully and most humbly," and the court took the complainant's view and fined the offender.

"Why is the Isle of Wight a fraud?" "Because it has Needles you cannot thread, Freshwater you cannot drink, Cowes you cannot milk, and Newport you cannot bottle."—"Tit-Bits."

Cahill—Was the shtrike a success? Cassidy—It was! Afther being out six weeks we succeded in gittin' back our jobs.—"Puck."

OUR CONSTANT AIM IS TO SERVE OUR PATRONS THOROUGHLY AND WELL.

Kindly favor us with a visit at your earliest convenience, so as to assure yourself that we serve the public thoroughly and well. Our dispensing department is under the most competent management, insuring perfect safety in the preparation of prescriptions. Our drugs, medicines and tinctures are the purest and our general stock suited to the wants of the most critical.

YOU NEED THE BEST.

If you are rheumatic, neuralgic, dyspeptic, nervous, weak or run down, you need the best medicine that medical science can suggest. We strongly recommend Paine's Celery Compound for your troubles. It has cured others afflicted as you are; it cannot fail in your case. We sell the kind that makes sick people well. WM. MADILL, Druggist, Peterborough, Ont.

Like a Child.

A noteworthy result of the use of that splendid remedy, Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets, is the feeling of youth and buoyancy experienced as soon as the pepsin and diastase contained in Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets begin to act on the food.

The blood is very soon improved in quality on using Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets because instead of being fed by the product of a weak, sour, enfeebled stomach, the full nourishment of perfectly digested food goes to make it up.

The whole body soon feels the influence of Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets because this rich, new blood is immediately carried to every muscle and nerve, building up the wasted places and toning up the entire system.

The mind and mental condition soon become fresh and wholesome because the mind takes its tone from the body. If the body is healthy, we are happy in spite of troubles. If we are happy in spite of troubles and our bodies are healthy, we feel young, for children are the happiest and healthiest of mankind as a general rule.

This is what Mrs. Susan Coome of Strathroy means when she says she feels like a child again owing to Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets. She writes:

"I have been troubled with Dyspepsia and Sour Stomach for fifteen years. After every hearty meal I would suffer so that I grew almost afraid to eat. I would often have to lie down after meals, and as for pastry of any kind, I couldn't touch it. Nothing I ate would digest. I tried different remedies, but got no relief. I heard of Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets, and got some to try. They cured me. I can eat anything now without the least fear. I feel like a child again. You are welcome to publish this letter that others may learn of Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets, and find health again as I did."

PROGRESS AND SUCCESS.

Progress and success have been our business reward up to the present time. No need to enlarge on our dispensing facilities; this department is run on the most approved system; promptness and accuracy mark all our work.

We are daily renewing and assorting our stock of Perfumes, Atomizers, Sponges, Brushes, Combs and Toilet goods.

THE PUBLIC VERDICT.

The public verdict is immensely in favor of Paine's Celery Compound. It is the great family medicine of the present day and never fails to do what it promises. Paine's Celery Compound will permanently cure kidney disease, liver complaint, ills resulting from impure blood, dyspepsia and stomach derangements. We sell the kind that cures. H. S. MACDONALD, Peterborough, Ont.

IN the recent elections in New York 800 voting machines were used in 70 cities and villages with entirely satisfactory results, the reports in every case being that the work of registering the will of the voters was done with unvarying accuracy.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of The Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. Johns, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 60 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Death of Miss Cecilia Rehally

The friends of Miss Cecelia Rehally, eldest daughter of Mr. John Rehally, of Otonabee, will be grieved to hear of her death, which occurred yesterday morning. Deceased was twenty-four years of age, and had been in ill health for some time, from the effects of a cold, contracted about a year ago.

The funeral will take place to-morrow morning from the family residence, lot 21, con. 8, Otonabee, and proceed to the Roman Catholic cemetery for interment.

A Narrow Escape

Mr. Thos. Parker, who conducts a repair shop at the corner of Queen and Hunter streets, was repairing an old gun yesterday, when it accidently went off and the contents came within an ace of striking his father-in-law. The gun had been brought to be repaired, and Mr. Parker had blown down the barrel and poked a wire into the nipple to see if the thing was loaded. He was holding the gun in a casual manner when it went off with the above results. A few pointers would not be out of place to those who handle guns. Never take it for granted that a gun is not loaded; never point it in the direction of any person, whether it is loaded or not. If boys and men would observe the foregoing, and carry out what is told them, there would be fewer accidents from shooting.

LETTER FROM HALIFAX

Messrs. Cranfield and O'Connor Express Their Appreciation

The following letter has been received by the Times from Messrs. Bert Cranfield and Leo O'Connor, two Peterborough boys who are now members of the Canadian Mounted Rifles.

In some manner the letter has been delayed in transmission, having been mailed some time ago.

Halifax, N. S., Jan. 3rd, 1902.

Editor Morning Times, Peterborough.

Dear Sir,—We desire through the columns of your paper to express our most hearty thanks to the boys of the Canadian General Electric Works and to our many friends in town for the the complimentary supper and purse presented to us on our departure from Peterborough for Halifax en route to South Africa. It is difficult to find words to express our feelings in this respect and also to those who assisted in giving us a most hearty send-off, but we wish to say that their kindness is much appreciated by us and we will in every instance do our best to bring honor and credit to the town through our actions. We will never forget the good old town and the thousands of loyal Canadians who gathered at the station to bid us farewell. The boys here are all well and desire to be remembered to all at home. Again thanking our many friends and you, Mr. Editor for your kindness, we remain,

Yours truly,

BERT CRANFIELD,

LEO O'CONNOR.

HOW IT CAME ABOUT

Many ladies living in distant rural districts, and regular users of Diamond Dyes, finding it impossible to procure from their general dealer patterns for the making up of mats and rugs, asked the manufacturers of Diamond Dyes to supply them from time to time as required. This necessitated the importing from manufacturers in Scotland of the best Hessian, the employment of artists, large plates to print from and the employment of a large staff) to print and color designs. The manufacturers of Diamond Dyes are now in a position to to supply their patterns by mail as well as through the best Dry Goods merchants. Sheets of patterns and designs sent free to any address upon receipt of a Postal. The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain St., Montreal, P. Q.

Cathedral Wedding

At St. Peter's Cathedral yesterday afternoon, Rev. Dr. O'Brien united in marriage Miss Caroline Fischer, daughter of Mr. Joseph Fischer, town, and Mr. John Murphy, of Detroit, son of Mr. Patrick Murphy, of town. The bride was assisted by Miss Margaret Crowley, and Mr. Thos. Turcotte performed the duties of best man. A number of friends of the contracting parties were present at the ceremony and their best wishes will follow the happy couple to Detroit, where they will make their home.

Malt Breakfast Food

Is the Ideal Nourishment for Invalids and Convalescents.

In the past, great difficulty was experienced in securing for invalids and convalescents a food suited for weak digestion. Delicious and strengthening Malt Breakfast Food prepared as a porridge or gruel, makes the most nutritious and most appetizing of foods. The weakest stomach easily assimilates it, as by the action of the Malt it is partially predigested and ready to be taken up by the natural process of absorption. Very delicate dishes, such as custards and blanc-manges, can be prepared with Malt Breakfast Food that will certainly tempt the invalid's palate. The delicious flavor perfect digestibility and great nourishing qualities of Malt Breakfast Food are well known to tens of thousands regularly using it.

TOWN COUNCIL.

THE POULTRY SHOW.

R. H. Leary and Wm. Collins addressed Council on behalf of the Peterborough Poultry and Pet Stock Association, and asked that a substantial grant be given the association this year.

Mr. Leary explained that all the assistance the association got is from the Town and County Councils. The business men had only been asked to purchase a membership ticket at $1, for which they received full value in return. The Association in conjunction with Agricultural Society had been put to additional expense this year in purchasing permanent coops to accomodate 400 birds. They will require the Market Hall for three days, which should the weather be cold, it will cost $30 to heat. Should a subscription grant be voted the exhibition will be thrown open to the public free.

Mr. Wm. Collins said that the reason a grant had not been solicited in 1901 was because the exhibition had been held in November. This month, however, was found too early for the birds, many of which were found to be not through moulting, so the dates for this year's show has been fixed for January 21st to 23rd. A new feature will be lectures by Mr. Silverwood, of Lindsay, an expert poultry fancier.

This matter was referred to the Finance Committee.

STANDING COMMITTEE.

Ald. Clinkscale submitted the following:

Gentlemen,—Your Special Committee appointed to strike the Standing Committees beg leave to report and recommend as follows:

1. That the Standing Committees for the year be composed as follows:

Finance—Ald. Roger (chairman), Rush, Clinkscale, Best and Corkery.

Board of Works—Ald. Best (chairman), Edgecumbe, Roger, Clinkscale and Shortly.

Manufacturers and Railways—Ald. Rush (chairman), Roger, Morrison, Best and Clinkscale.

Property, Building and Health—Ald. Batten (chairman), McGregor, Clinkscale, Turner and Edgecumbe.

Market—Ald. McGregor (chairman), Turner, Batten, Corkery and Roger.

Court of Revision—Ald. Shortly (chairman), Rush, Roger, Batten and Edgecumbe.

Joint with County—Ald. Morrison (chairman), Roger Rush, Best and Shortly.

Legal—Ald. Edgecumbe (chairman), Roger, Rush, Corkery and Morrison.

2. That a grant of $100.00 be made to the Mayor to meet the contingent expenses of his office.

3. That as usual $100.00 be appropriated and set aside as a fund for the contingent expenses of Chairmen of Committees, and that the Treasurer be authorized to pay such expenses out of this fund on the certificate of the Chairman of the Finance Committee.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Ald. Corkery moved in amendment,—That all the members of the Council be named on the first three Committees, as last year. No seconder being forthcoming the report was adopted as read.

SCHOOL TRUSTEES.

A bylaw to appoint High School Trustees and two members of the Board of Health passed its several readings.

Messrs. Robert Fair, V. Eastwood and F. J. Jamieson, were appointed members of the Board of Education, the latter gentlemen to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of Mr. Henry Denne.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

Messrs. Wm. Ayres and Geo. Schneider were appointed members of the local Board of Health.

CHILDREN'S AID.

Ald. Clinkscale moved, seconded by Ald. Batten,—That the Treasurer be authorized to pay the customary monthly grant of $25 to the Children's Aid Society.—Carried.

Ald. Rush moved, seconded by Ald. McGregor,—That the Treasurer be authorized to pay the first payment to the Board of Education.—Carried.

Council then adjourned.

Paine's Celery Compound

The Best Invigorator and Strengthener for Old People

ITS USE INSURES FREEDOM FROM THE INFIRMITIES THAT COME WITH ADVANCING YEARS.

It Bestows on the Aged a Condition of Comfort, Happiness and Peace That No Other Agency Can Give.

We should give careful attention to the physical welfare of the aged in our homes. Their chief troubles are constipation, flatulence, drowsiness, rheumatism, neuralgia and indigestion.

Paine's Celery Compound is the world's best medicine for all the besetting troubles of the old. Its regulating influence on the liver, kidneys and bowels, removes the disorders that come to the aged. When you are old, Paine's Celery Compound stimulates the vital power, regulates digestion, and promotes a healthy appetite. It builds you up and adds years of comfort, happiness and peace to your life.

See that you get PAINE'S, the kind that makes old people active, fresh and young. Look for the name PAINE'S on each bottle and wrapper. If you are offered any other kind you are getting a substitute that is worthless.

Detroit, Mich., June 24, 1899.

My Dear Sir:—Yours of the 14th inst to hand, and because of business, you will pardon my delay in making reply. I am pleased to note the wonderful success of the Canada Business College, and as my mind goes back to some 18 years ago, and I was then permitted to be one of your students, I wish to assure you with a grateful heart, that I have never regretted the many pleasant and happy days I spent in your school. I say pleasant, because I always found you courteous and kind to all, and happy, because I first learned from you the true principles of a business career and which I was called upon to adopt.

Wishing you every success, I am Sir,

Yours Truly,

A. A. WILSON.

(Formerly of Morpeth, Ont.)

Mr. Wilson is now with a large paper concern in Boston, Mass. You will see that he attributes his success in life to the fact that he took a course in life to the fact that he took a course with us.

If you cannot possibly come to Chatham, we can give you instruction by MAIL at your home, in BOOKKEEPING, SHORTHAND or PENMANSHIP, through our Mail Course Department. During the past year, 304 of our pupils secured good positions. Their combined earnings are close to

London Directors, F. Bruch, C. J. Palmer and D. Symons London Secretary H. L. Claridge. The company was registered October 2nd, 1895, under the laws of the Transvaal, and holds upwards of 2,000 claims in the districts of Klerksdorp and Potchefstroom. The authorized capital is £600,000 in shares of £1, of which £500,000 has been issued and paid up. The accounts are made up annually to August 31st, and submitted in Johannesburg about November. In a circular issued in November, 1899, it was stated that the company had then in London cash and liquid assets for £110,000 besides holding 62,000 shares of £1 in the Main Reef West Company, Ltd. No report was received last year but this notice has been officially revised. A register of shares is kept in London.

Advices from London predict a substantial rise in "Klerksdorp", the present price being 15 shillings as against a price of £3 15 s. before the war.

100 shares of this stock at 15 shillings per share—$365.62: 20 per cent of which is $73.12, balances carried at 6 per cent.

We buy and sell either for cash or on 20 per cent margin.

Write for our booklet on South African mines, which will be ready about the end of the month. As only a limited number will be issued they will be mailed in the order in which applications are received. It will contain a great deal of information and will be a useful reference book.

Quotations received daily by cable.

Information furnished on any of the South African stocks.

The Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

PATENTED 10TH MARCH, 1894.

For hard or soft coal, coke or peat. The only coal stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

THE STAR is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion———why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

THE STAR has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica,

After being filled the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

THE STAR is 25 per cent. more economical than any other stove.

More than 5,000 are in use in the lower provinces.

PRICE LIST

No.	Height	Diameter.	Price.
0	24½ in.	9 in.	$11.20
1	30½ in	9 in.	12.00
2	34 in.	10½ in.	15.00
3	37½ in.	12 in.	19.20
4	41 in.	15 in.	28.80

DIRECTIONS

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention.

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room, the size of which is 45 by 33 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other. ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 "Star" stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The "Star" gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal. MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 STAR coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star and it requires a minimum of attention. TIMES PRINTING CO.

WHERE HAS SLIPPERY DE WET DISAPPEARED TO

Once More the Report of General Kitchener is Silent Concerning Him

THOUGHT TO HAVE BEEN TRAPPED BY KITCHENER

The General's Silence Leads to the Expectation that Such is the Case at Last in South Africa

London, Jan. 14.—Once more De Wet, the slippery Boer, is at the vanishing point and beyond it, in the South African horizon. Where he is no one knows. Kitchener has given his eel-like foe many a notice in his weekly reports, but this week his pen has not traced the short an troublesome name. This leads leading London military critics to believe that De Wet is in the toils this time and the ominous silence of Kitchener means that the taciturn commander is hopeful of closing in upon De Wet's force and taking him prisoner.

Lord Kitchener reports that since January 6th, twenty Boers have been killed, nine have been wounded, 241 have been captured, and nine have surrendered.

BOTHA HAS HOPE.

London, Jan. 14.—A Johannesburg despatch says that Botha hopes that the British Parliament will not authorise the expenditure of further money on the war, when it meets. This, he says, would cause the withdrawal of British troops from the country.

PUBLIC LIBRARY MEETING

Reports Show the Good Work Done in 1901—The Institution in a Healthy Condition

The annual meeting of the Public Library was held in the reading rooms on Monday evening. Dr. Burnham, President of the Management Committee, occupied the chair. The following report was read and adopted:

Annual Report of the Public Library for 1901:

Your Committee of Management beg leave to present the following statement of the business of the Public Library for the year 1901.

The year just closed was a quiet and uneventful one in the history of the Public Library. While business was booming in our progressive town and fresh enterprises have been entered on, the effect seems to have been to take the attention of the people from books, and the number read—though larger than last year was less than some previous years, but any slacking up in book reading has been made up by the numbers reading magazines etc., in the reading rooms, which are well filled with members, and others who ought to become members.

The Library Committee have in the past year added 263 volumes to the Library. They used their best judgment in the selection of the books, and will be pleased to receive from members new books, and trust that all will enter in the book kept for the purpose the name of any new book they would like to see on the shelves.

The class in machine drawing held during the winter was most successful. After an examination by the Department of Education, thirteen certificates of proficiency were awarded.

The reading rooms are open to members from 10 a.m., to 9 p.m., and are supplied with a large number of daily and weekly papers and magazines.

During the year there were 263 volumes added, bringing the total number up to 9,162 volumes. The number issued was 14,420.

SPREAD OF SMALLPOX

State Reports Show an Increase of Nearly 50 Per Cent For the Week.

Minneapolis, Minn. Jan. 15.—Dr. H. M. Bracken yesterday reported 379 cases of smallpox in the state for the week ending Jan. 11. It is the largest number of cases ever reported by the state medical department for a like period, and shows an increase of nearly 50 per cent over the preceding week, when 251 cases were reported.

Minneapolis reported 22 cases; St. Louis county, 22 cases, 18 of which are in Duluth; Carver county, 30; Clay county, 42 cases.

Dr. Bracken says the alarming increase is attributable only to the usual causes which have given the department so much trouble. Relatives and friends of patients are loath to report smallpox.

Speaker's Sore Throat

Public speakers and singers know how useless and sickening are cough mixtures, sprays, lozenges, &c., for irritable or sore throat, and state that the most satisfactory remedy is Catarrhozone, the advantage of which is that it acts quickly and is convenient to use in public places. Catarrhozone relieves congestion, allays inflammation, and is a protection to the membrane. As a safe guard against colds and Catarrh it has no equal. Rev. Mr. McKay, Goderich, says "Catarrhozone is an excellent remedy for throat irritation arising from throat irritation." Physicians, ministers and singers recommend Catarrhozone; druggists sell it for $1. Small size 25c. By mail from Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

DUTY ON WHEAT BRITAIN'S NEW MOVE

More Money Must be Raised to Carry on the War

A SYSTEM OF PROTECTION

Free Trade Has Seen Its Best Days in the Mother Land—Government's Financial Proposals Expected to be Sensational

London. Jan. 15.—It is becoming daily more evident that the Government's financial proposals in the coming session, which opens next week, will be of a sensational character. Orthodox free trade lines will be departed from, and the bulk of the money required to cover the deficit caused by the war may be obtained from indirect taxation.

The Government's best friends, the liquor makers and liquor sellers, will not be further vexed by higher duties, and their well-to-do supporters are to be relieved of anxiety in the matter of the income tax, which will not be increased beyond the present high figure. All this is made clear from the official and semi-official utterances of the last few weeks. It is clear also that the public mind is being prepared for something in the nature of protective duties.

One Radical member of Parliament has just declared himself in favor of an important duty of two shillings per quarter upon wheat, and the most eminent of the Liberal economists and statisticians, Sir Robert Giffen, a man whom Mr. Gladstone often consulted in fiscal matters, has also pronounced for the same duty, which until to-day has been regarded by all Liberal as a thing accursed. With such encouragement, how is it possible for a Tory Chancellor of the Exchequer to resist the temptation of obtaining millions from that long neglected source of revenue!

Sugar had until last year been regarded by Liberal financiers as little less sacred than wheat, but the duty imposed last year has been easily collected, has yielded well, and has not apparently hurt anybody. Therefore, it will be retained and in all probability doubled. An import duty on canned goods is practically settled, and a tax on petroleum is under consideration.

Money must be raised, and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach is not afraid of offending either individuals, trades or corporations in his search for new sources of revenue. The Liberals as a party will fight any proposals for grain taxation, but that fact is not a prospect which need cause serious alarm to the present Government.

The one thing which Ministers have cause to fear is the general indignation caused by the agreement of the Government with the telephone company. Strong opposition to its ratification by Parliament has been organized. There will be a stiff fight and desertions from the Ministerial camp, but the Government will doubtless surmount even this obstacle.

The sugar people have not the least doubt that the Chancellor of the Exchequer has his eyes upon them once more and they are vigorously preparing for the worst. During the last month 550,000 bags and 125,000 cases of sugar were imported, which is about 60 per cent. beyond the monthly average; while during the first week of this month 225,000 bags and cases arrived in London. Almost equal increases are reported from Hull, Liverpool and other importing ports. In fact, a vast gamble is now in progress in sugar, the chief gamesters being the German bankers, who have been accustomed to finance the German beet sugar industry.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach is well aware of what is going on and has doubtless already decided what steps to take to prevent these enormous quantities of sugar from escaping payment of duty. The House of Commons has full power to make a new or increased duty retroactive.

CONTROL OF SETTLEMENT.

Hong Kong, Jan 15.—The Consuls of the Powers and the Chinese authorities have just signed an agreement for the administration of the new international settlement at Kulangsu in the island of Amoy. The endeavors of Japan to obtain an exclusive settlement there have been opposed by other foreigners possessing larger interests. The Japanese landed a force of troops in Amoy last year, but afterward withdrew.

WIRELESS CHAT AT SEA.

Queenstown, Jan. 15.—The Cunard Line steamship Umbria, from New York, arrived here to-day. The captain reports that he was in wireless communication under the Marconi system with the steamship Etruria of the same line on Jan. 8. for two hours and forty minutes. The distances varied from forty to 104 miles.

OUTPUT OF TRANSVAAL MINES.

London, Jan. 15.—Despatches from the Transvaal show that the output of the Witwatersrand in the month of December was 52,897 ounces of fine gold. The output for the previous month was 39,075 ounces.

Calls New Battery Wonderful

Franklin H. Head Highly Praises Edison's Latest Invention.

Says Cheap and Good Means of Storage Will Revolutionize Electricity.

Chicago, Jan. 11.—Thomas A. Edison's new storage battery was exhibited yesterday afternoon by Franklin H. Head in a lecture at the University of Chicago on "The Steel Industry," which was the first of a series of three talks he is to give on that subject. The reason for mentioning the electric battery was that steel is used as one of its parts.

"This new battery of Edison's," said Mr. Head, "is one of the most wonderful inventions Edison has ever made, and very likely the most valuable. The storage battery now used in street cars is very cumbersome and deteriorates with great rapidity. It weighs about six tons and you can get but 44 per cent of the power out of it that is put in.

"The new battery, on the other hand, weighs only one-fourth as much as the old one, utilizes 77 per cent of the power and seems almost indestructible. I recently saw some in Mr. Edison's laboratory which he has had in operation for nearly a year and a half, but they are nearly as good as the new ones. If the new battery does all that is predicted for it the farmer will soon be threshing his grain and pumping his water for his live stock by electricity and his wife will be using electricity to heat her flatirons."

Mr. Head said that two entirely new substances had been discovered by Edison which he uses in his new battery. Unlike any other substances known to man, these two are not to be found in nature. One is low oxide of iron, composed of two parts iron and one part oxide, and the other compound is composed of two parts oxide and one part nickel.

Mr. Head told the students how the different grades of iron and steel were made, comparing the present methods with those in vogue many years ago. He said that whereas it formerly took six tons of coal to produce one ton of steel it now takes but one ton of coal to make one ton of steel.

Much amusement was created by the speaker when he called attention to the use of iron in pipes through which petroleum is carried many miles at a very cheap rate and said that "this cheap transportation of oil has been one thing which has made fortunes for men who have endowed great universities."

ITEMS OF INTEREST

Cowes, Isle of Wight, Jan. 14.—The British steamer Braemar Castle of the Castle Mail Packet Company, which sailed from Cape Town December 26 for Southampton, stranded at high tide early this morning on Gurnard Ledge, Isle of Wight, and remains fast. She is not leaking. The 85 passengers on board the steamer were landed by a tender.

THE KING IN GERMANY.

Berlin, Jan. 14.—The Prince of Wales' visit to Emperor William on the occasion of the Emperor's birthday will be only for a day. Those who see in this visit a desire on the part of the British Government to show goodwill towards Germany make a mistake. It is intended simply as a token of King Edward's personal regard for Emperor William. The Prince of Wales, therefore, has declined all invitations to entertainments proposed in his honor, including a reception by the German regiment of which King Edward is colonel, so that the German may be under no misapprehension regarding the private and personal character of the visit. Had the Prince of Wales been here last week he would not have been able to read any Berlin periodical that had not lampoons on his father, caricatures of Lord Kitchener, or brutal descriptions of British inhumanity in South Africa. The more serious papers are not dealing in such extravagances and exaggerations, which are disproportionate to the views taken of yesterday evening's South African despatches. Considering that Councillor von Bulow's two speeches and the utterances of the German Minister to Great Britain Prince Wolff von Metternicht, at Hamburg, were deliberate efforts on the part of the Government to demonstrate the friendliness toward Great Britain, the illustrated papers here show singular malignity in giving grotesque representations of the torture of innocent persons in the South African concentration camps. These things do not affect the inflexibly correct attitude of the government, but they intensify the already heated feeling against Great Britain.

ALONE IN HER PALACE.

Paris, Jan 14.—The Princess Ghika, a member of the reigning family of Roumania, is startling Paris by living alone in her palace, not permitting a human soul to remain in her house. Her sole protector is a Great Dane dog. She will not have any servants, cooks her own food, and people say she is the most democratic sprig of royalty in the world.

She is talented and plays many instruments. In desiring to live alone she resembles the late Countess de Castiglione, but her motive is different. The Countess declined to see people only after her beauty had faded. The Princess keeps away her servants because she wishes to show that a member of the royal family can earn her living if necessary.

A NEW KIND OF BALLAST.

London, Jan. 14.—Steamers are being built in England with ballast tanks underneath each rail. The tanks are triangular, and may be used either for water or cargo. They are in such easy position that the inventor asserts the ballast will make the vessel a smooth sailer. It is expected to do away with many broken shafts in vessels running light.

Other advantages are said to be the ability to build a ship on this principle of much larger dimensions than would be allowed by the rules of the conventional type of single-decked vessel, a larger reserve of buoyancy, a higher working deck, the ability to trim to suit any condition, hatches twenty-two feet wide, the capacity in the upper tanks for bunker oil sufficient for 20,000 miles, adaptability for coal trade, quick discharging and loading, large deck space and unsinkability.

If the ship lost her bottom the upper tanks would keep her afloat, or if her upper sides were damaged, the inner shell would protect the holds from being filled.

CONSUMPTION OF BEER.

Berlin, Jan. 14.—The consumption of beer in 1901 averaged fifty-seven gallons a person through the empire, the average rising in Bavaria to 211 gallons for each person. The average consumption in 1881, according to the official records was thirty-eight gallons a person. An increase in two decades of nearly 50 per cent.

WHERE DEPRESSION IS GREATEST.

Berlin, Jan. 14.—Dr. Jastrow, of the Berlin University, who is making studies of the labor market and the industrial situation, finds that coincident with the depression is a greater concentration of capital and the squeezing out of the smaller and weaker concerns. The improved reports apply mainly to great establishments, which are absorbing markets previously held by their small rivals.

PAID TO ADULTERATE MILK.

Paris, Jan. 14.—The deplorable condition of the milk sold in Paris has led the press to begin a campaign denouncing its adulteration. The Matin, Journal and Echo de Paris are carrying it on vigorously and have already revealed the existence of a kind of Mafia among milkmen, who earn $5 to $8 per day by adulterating milk. They have a secret police of their own to watch the city police, bribe laboratory experts, provide counsel to defend or prosecute members and possess duplicates of all labels and seals so they can adulterate with impunity. Eighty per cent of the milk sold in Paris is declared unfit for use.

NEW LEYLAND LINE DIRECTORS.

London, Jan. 14.—The White Star line steamer Celtic, which is to sail from Liverpool, Jan. 15, for New York, will have among her passengers Henry Wilding, of Richardson, Spence & Co., English agents of the American Steamship line, who is understood to have been appointed to succeed J. R. Ellerman as chairman of the Board of Directors of the Leyland line.

BOERS AIDED BY THE EUROPEANS

The Gazette Says They Will be Able to Fight a Long Time

GENERAL OPPERMAN KILLED

The Boer Leader Who Aided in Attack on Benson Meets His Doom—Botha Still Hopeful of Success.

London, Jan. 14.—The Naval and Military Gazette warns its readers that much more hard fighting may be expected in South Africa. It urges the War Office to send a steady stream of fresh troops to South Africa to relieve the worn-out and decimated regiments which have been in the field since the commencement of hostilities. The Gazette farther asserts that a large number of Europeans are gathering in the north and northeastern sections of the Transvaal, fully equipped and with a reserve of 50,000 rifles, in anticipation of the leadership of Botha and De Wet when these generals have been driven from their present fields of operation.

OPPERMAN KILLED.

London, Jan. 14.—General Opperman, the well-known Boer General, who co-operated with Botha in the attack on Benson at Fort Itala, has been reported by Lord Kitchener as killed at Onvermacht.

BOERS MUST SURRENDER.

Cape Town, Jan. 14.—Speaking at a meeting of the Vigilance Association yesterday, Sir John Gordon Sprigg, Premier of Cape Colony, said that the termination of the war rested entirely with the Boers, it being only necessary for them to lay down their arms. Unconditional surrender was absolutely essential, and the Boers were sure to receive better treatment than they deserved.

WALKED 400 MILES TO JOIN RIFLES

Capt. Woodhouse Tramped from Dawson to White Horse

HAS ARRIVED AT WINNIPEG

Declined to Give Account of His Long Walk—Said It Was Nothing to Brag of—Going to Halifax.

Winnipeg, Jan. 14.—The military fever is still making the pulse of many a Canadian throb abnormally. Newly married men have rushed to enlist, eager to leave their wives if only they might reap their share of glory in South Africa. Other strange things have been done to prove that Canadians are hungering for martial exploits. But probably the most noticeable exhibition of warlike eagerness in the moving chapter is recorded to-day.

Capt. Woodhouse, formerly quartermaster-sergeant of the mounted police in the Yukon, arrived here yesterday en route for Halifax, where he hopes to join the Canadian Mounted Rifles. Woodhouse was so anxious to go to South Africa that he walked the entire distance from Dawson City to White Horse in the bitter winter weather by a lonely, untravelled road. He walked 400 miles before he could reach the railroads. He declines to give any account of his journey, modestly declaring that it was nothing to brag of anyway. A man of this stamp ought to prove the best kind of a soldier.

Your Nerves are Weak

You sleep badly, appetite variable. You eat but gain no strength. Morning tiredness makes you wish it were night. When night comes refreshing sleep is hard to obtain. You're run down, your blood is thin and watery, your nerves have grown weak, the thought of effort wearies you. You need Ferrozone; it makes blood—red, strong blood. An appetite? You'll get everything and digest it too. Strength! That's what plenty of food gives. Ferrozone gives hope, vigor, vim, endurance. Use Ferrozone and get strong. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

An Explosive Situation

London, Jan. 14.—The situation in Peking was delicate and unstable enough before the return of the Chinese court. That seems to have created a lot of new difficulties. It will be very difficult to avoid a clash between the extravagant pretensions of the Chinese government and the extreme sensitiveness of the Chinese people and the political and military self-assertion which seems absolutely necessary to the foreign representatives for their own protection. The legation guards established in Pekin constitute, in fact, a small army of occupation, with extra-territorial rights amounting to a practical sovereignty. These are established in the midst of a swarming hostile population, full of hatred for all foreigners, jealous of their presence in the country, ready to take umbrage at the least show of authority outside of the legation posts and eager to seize every opportunity to assault or assassinate stragglers from the garrisons.

They are established under the shadow of an imperial court which maintains its prestige only by pretension of universal supremacy and the fiction that all the nations of the earth owe it allegiance and pay it homage. It is the business of the court to keep up this fiction in its relations with the foreign legations and their guards and servants. It is the business on the other hand, to assert the authority and independence of their governments, to maintain their influence over the acts and policy of the Chinese government and to secure their safety by a constant show of defensive force.

The fear of collisions expressed in connection with the return of the court to Pekin, and divided views of foreigners in relation to the conduct of the legations toward the government, indicate how extremely delicate the situation may become. The legation guards have been ordered off the streets prepared for the imperial entry and are to be kept in their quarters during the festivities. The return of the court is to be given the appearance of a triumph over foreign enemies, instead of a restoration by their sufferance. Many foreigners believe that the court will maintain the old policy of giving the relations of foreign representatives with the government the appearance of inferiority and subjection, in order to maintain its ancient fiction of world-supremacy.

Nearly all past troubles in China have arisen from the ignorance in which the people were kept as to the real power and position of the Chinese government. It will be more difficult than ever to maintain the fiction with little foreign armies encamped in the midst of them. If it is maintained, more outbreaks against foreigners are to be dreaded. If it is not maintained, the Chinese will lose confidence in their own government and the nation will fall into anarchy. Either alternative would be very perplexing to deal with. The concert of powers has not improved the situation in China very much by two years of war and negotiation.

CAMPBELL-BANNERMAN REFERS TO BOER WAR

A Tumultuous Scene at Meeting of Branch of Liberal Federation

ADVOCATES CONCILIATION INSTEAD OF FORCE

Columns are More Mobile—New Method Adopted Results in Frightening the Enemy

London. Jan. 13.—At the inauguration to-day of the new metropolitan organization in London of the Liberal Federation, Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, leader of the Liberal party, was the chief speaker. He was given an enthusiastic reception. In the course of his speech he contended that the Government, in stopping farm-burning in South Africa, and in improving the concentration camps, had justified his criticisms. He was convinced he said, that the war could be ended by conciliation instead of force. The Liberal party, months ago, had urged this, and now they were reinforced from the most influential quarter, namely Lord Rosebery, whose retirement he had always regretted. He had publicly and privately urged Lord Rosebery to rejoin the party. Sir Henry interpreted Lord Rosebery's Chesterfield speech as showing a desire to return to the party. He hoped Lord Rosebery would support the Liberals in their efforts to secure peace, regarding which there was no substantial difference between Lord Rosebery's view and his own. There was absolutely nothing to prevent Lord Rosebery from co-operating with the Liberals, and it would not be the speaker's fault if he did not cooperate.

Before Sir Henry's speech, a letter from Lord Rosebery was read, excusing his absence. The reading was interrupted by tumultuous cries of, "Traitor!" "Burn it!" Lord Rosebery said in his letter that he hoped the meeting would aim at securing a unity of common sense and Liberalism, to which he trusted some contribution had been made by him in his Chesterfield speech, and that unity would proceed on broad, progressive national lines.

The audience was chiefly composed of anti-war Liberals, who did not receive with favor Sir Henry's advances to Lord Rosebery, who was repeatedly hissed. Some shouted "Wobbler" when Sir Henry said he rejoiced at Lord Rosebery's return. Sir Henry also elicited angry dissent by certain of his references to the war. On the other hand, a section cheered at Sir Henry's references to the co-operation of Lord Rosebery, and the shouts of assent and dissent were so indiscriminate that little could be deducted from the meeting as an indication of the development of the party.

The temper of the meeting was distinctly hostile to the ex-Premier. The speech of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman clearly indicated that if Lord Rosebery returns to the Liberal fold he must come unreservedly and in full accord with the present policy of the Liberal party.

Miss Hobhouse, who was the first person to agitate regarding the condition of the concentration camps in South Africa, was called to the platform, and received an ovation. In the meantime, pamphlets denouncing Lord Rosebery as a traitor to the party were thrown broadcast from the galleries.

COLUMNS ARE MORE MOBILE.

London, Jan. 14.—Wiring from Ermelo the correspondent of the Times says General Bruce Hamilton's columns have returned after a ten days' expedition on the Swaziland border. As a result of four night marches 105 Boers were accounted for. The enemy has become so thoroughly scared by the presence of the columns that he is careful to keep well out of striking distance, and the British have to rely more than ever on night marches. The strain on the men and horses is great, but the system adopted by Hamilton gives the maximum of mobility and the minimum of discomfort to the troops. Each man carries two days' rations, and extra horses carry one day's rations. As the veldt at present provides excellent grazing for the animals the force is enabled to operate for at least three days. In the meantime wheeled transports follow independently and rejoin the mounted force as soon as possible.

Shall I Drop It?

Killing Two Birds with One Stone.

A man said: "I nearly killed two birds with one stone when I ruined stomach and nerves with coffee. Quit it? Well, I think so. I had rather be well, feel good, eat meals, sleep well and be able to do something in this world than to have all the coffee on earth."

Brain workers can get on with coffee a while, but the day comes when dyspepsia "begins to show its head, then come times when the brain gets tired and has to be goaded. That's the time to look out, for it is a sure forerunner of that terrible disease, Nervous Prostration and probable paralysis.

Coffee poison effects stomach and nerves (the brain included), and if persisted in will do its work sure as the sun is sure to rise. Medicine will not avert the final attack. There is but one thing to do. Drop it, if you show the least sign of the poison affecting you in stomach, nerves, kidneys, bowels, eyes or heart.

It is easy to change from coffee to Postum Food Coffee if you insist on having Postum prepared by long boiling. That brings out the taste and food value.

Tolstoy on Marriage and Woman.

AFTER an interval of nearly ten years Count Tolstoy reverts to the subject of his much-discussed "Kreutzer Sonata," and in a book on "The Sexual Question" elaborately expounds his theory of marriage and purity. A chapter from this book has been translated from the original for "La Revue" (Paris), and it sufficiently indicates the position defended in this volume. "Marriage," Tolstoy declares, "is a sin, not a duty," and the ideal of religious and moral men should be its abolition—at the cost of the gradual disappearance of the human race. The book appears to be exceptionally frank and outspoken, and the author does not shrink from the logical conclusion of his premises, but nothing could prove more completely that the so-called "great" Russian is simply a madman.

Here, for example, is one of his categorical statements:

"The whole question of sexual relationship is solved in one word—the God-fearing man, married or celibate, must always and under all circumstances be as chaste as possible.

"Marriage is not a Christian institution. Christ did not marry, nor did any one of His disciples, and He never authorized it. Addressing men among whom there were married people, He told them not to put away their wives—that is, not to divorce them, as had been allowable under the Mosaic law; to some He distinctly said that it were better they did not marry, and He told all that the greatest sin was to regard a woman as an object of desire."

But this is not all. Marriage is decidedly anti-Christian, Tolstoy asserts, for it turns men and women away from the only purpose of life, from their only duty—the realization of God's will. The love of man for woman or of woman for man conflicts with brotherly love, the only love that is pure, unselfish, essential to true happiness. For those who earnestly desire to follow Christ's teachings, Tolstoy draws the following moral and practical conclusions, after stating that Christianity in its ethical part holds up an ideal to be slowly approached, not a rigid set of rules to be obeyed once for all or disobeyed at one's peril:

1. "Those who are firm and strong enough to overcome temptation and weakness should not marry at all, but remain absolutely chaste."

2. "Those who cannot live up to this ideal of Christian conduct should marry and be as chaste as possible—have few children, live with their wives not as lovers, but as brothers with sisters; and they should educate their children properly, discouraging marriage and training them for celibacy."

3. "The married should regard themselves as sinners, but as sinners whose fall is not irremediable, and who are still able to promote the Christian ideal within their marriage relation."

The important thing, Tolstoy continues, is the point of view, and the chief trouble is that marriage has been regarded as a blessing, if not as an actual sacrament.

The prevailing conception, according to Tolstoy, is absurd as well as wrong. He illustrates this by citing the novelists. At present, he says, "novels end with the marriage of the hero and the heroine. They ought to begin with it, and end with the separation of the hero and heroine—that is, with their liberation. To write of the life of men and women and stop at the point of marriage is like telling of a voyage and suspending the recital when the traveler falls among brigands."

Men, Tolstoy admits, have tyrannized over women and held them in legal subjection, but the effect has been disastrous to the men. The women have exercised the subtle and effective power of passive resistance and have secured the real control of society. It is the women who rule, who determine the direction of our art, literature, politics and government. They hold public opinion, which is stronger than law and government. Their influence is based on their attraction, and is essentially immoral and irreligious. They must be resisted and converted into comrades and coworkers for Christ.

For the Next Royal Babe.

It is said that never before has there been such a mighty stitching going on at one time as at present in Holland. Every woman of the kingdom appears to feel an absorbing interest in the prospective baby who will be heir to the Dutch throne, and tremendous rivalry among the good wives in the various towns is manifesting itself in the contributions which they are making to the royal layette. Little dresses, gowns, caps, skirts, sacks, coverlets, pillows—everything imaginable in baby outfitting—are being made in elaborate form, covered with beautiful lace and embroidery, and wrought with wonderful needlework skill. The women of Amsterdam are not content with mere needlework. They are to present a Dutch baby's cap of linen, with the great ear-lappets of the national headdress, but the linen is to be sprinkled with costly pearls and diamonds. The women of the Dutch nobility will give a cradle to the royal baby. It is to be a very gorgeous affair of silver, decorated with the arms of Holland and Mecklenburg Schwerin, while at the head of the cradle is a full-sized angel of silver, and at the foot a silver baby of equally lifelike proportions. From the women of The Hague will come the christening robe of white silk, with its jeweled embroidery and eiderdown, and its buttons of diamonds, and the wives of the cabinet ministers are making the satin cushion upon which the baby will be laid as soon as born, so that, according to old custom, it may be shown to the cabinet ministers, and they may certify that it is a genuine prince or princess.

A set of rules for young men to follow are those laid down by a man who built up an immense business, the ramifications of which extended all over the United States. They will bear perusal and are as follows:

Keep good company or none. Never be idle.

If your hands cannot be usefully employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind.

Always speak the truth. Make few promises.

Paine's Celery Compound Saves the Life of a Montreal Lady.

A WORK DONE THAT DOCTORS AND THE USE OF ORDINARY MEDICINE COULD NOT ACCOMPLISH.

Mrs. Legault Says She is Positively Cured.

Every weak, sleepless, nervous and discouraged woman should be aware of the blessed truth that Paine's Celery Compound is the only and true health-giver. If other treatments have failed to give you health, let your faith be centered on Paine's Celery Compound. It cures nervous prostration, insomnia, sleeplessness and irritableness—serious troubles that often lead to insanity. Mrs. A. Legault, St. Andre St., Montreal, says:

"I cannot help telling all sufferers what Paine's Celery Compound has done for me. I would have been a lost woman had I continued six months longer in suffering. My case was a bad one. Headache, insomnia, nervous prostration and loss of memory made up my troubles, and I feared they would lead to insanity. I went to several doctors who treated me with all their skill, but I did not get any better. My friends advised me to try Paine's Celery Compound. The first bottle gave me little relief, but the second began to work miraculously on my nerves. I continued using the compound, and after using nine bottles I can positively say I am cured.

The "Mexican Herald" tells of an exciting scene witnessed in the Romita ring during a bull fight on bicycles. Two of the cholos placed the banderillas, or short stabbing sticks, into the neck of the bulls. When the second bull entered the ring, Jose Basurto, manoeuvring his bicycle cleverly, placed the sticks with great daring, while his comrade coolly sat on his wheel, which was propped to stand upright in the center of the ring. Luckily, the bull paid no attention to him.

In Lower California there is a colony of outlaws, including some of the most noted escaped criminals who operated during the latter half of the nineteenth century. They live in a strange, rugged stretch of country, with the Gulf of California on one side and a range of foothills which spread down toward the Mexican border on the other. There are no ports at this point on the coast of California, and no railroads reaching in from the other direction, so the men are pretty well isolated. They are practically prisoners, but as they do no harm nobody has troubled to interfere with them.

Arrangements are being made by a Mr. Robinson of New York for a round-the-world trip on a motor car. It is proposed that the tour shall start from Calais about May, 1902. Moscow will be taken in via Paris and Berlin. Thence the route will follow the great Siberian Railway to Vladivostock, when ship will be taken to Japan. This interesting country will be traversed, and the party will re-ship to America. No difficulty is anticipated in crossing the American Continent, though up to the present no one has accomplished the feat. At New York passage will be taken for Liverpool; from there the run will be to Dover, when the tour will conclude.

"Fifty casks of a special design and the strongest possible construction," says the "Youth's Companion," will soon be sent to Behring Sea by the United States Revenue Marine Service, and placed upon the highest hummocks of the floe ice. It is hoped by tracing their future course to test the direction of the currents that cross the polar regions. The casks are twenty-eight inches long and sixteen inches in diameter, pointed at the ends and painted black, so as to be seen easily. Inside of each are directions printed in several different languages, asking the finder to write to the nearest United States consul, giving the latitude and longitude in which the cask was found, and the date."

What Motherhood Means

Motherhood means either happiness or misery. There is scant happiness for the mother, who in pain and weakness brings into the world a weakling babe which she can neither nurse nor nourish.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription fits women for motherhood. It strengthens the maternal organism. It tranquilizes the nerves, encourages the appetite and brings refreshing sleep. It makes the birth hour practically painless and gives the mother the nourishment to give her child.

There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription," and it is absolutely free from opium, cocaine, and all other narcotics.

"Words cannot express how grateful I am for your kind advice and your 'Favorite Prescription,'" writes Mrs. D. B. Barricks, of Perrows, Campbell Co., Va. "I feel that it has cured me. I had been in poor health for four years. Suffered greatly with my right side, also with bearing-down pains, and my nerves were in a dreadful state. After using four bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription' I am now well. I am the mother of two children. With the first child I suffered twenty-eight hours, and with the second I used your medicine and was sick only three hours. I believe Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription to be the best medicine in the world for suffering females. I wish you great success, and hope that God will bless you in your noble work."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, in paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Shadowed" in Paris.

WHEN a literary fish of any importance is taken nowadays one may be sure that a good many editors and publishers have been dangling their well-baited hooks before its nose. For two years or more Captain Dreyfus has had offers for what he might ultimately choose to publish. The business of offering advances and royalties to authors is not usually attended with a great amount of personal danger. But there is an American woman, a journalist, living in Paris, who could tell a different tale, says the "Saturday Evening Post." Two summers ago, just as the great trial was drawing to its close, she was in London, and there met an enterprising "American" publisher. Conversation turned, as did all conversation that summer, in either England or France, upon Dreyfus, and the publisher confided to the lady his desire to publish something veritably from the pen of Dreyfus. The lady, it happened, was on terms of some intimacy with the inner circle of Dreyfus' friends, and when she left England for Paris she was commissioned to do what she could to get something for the publisher, either from Captain or Madame Dreyfus.

Two days after she left London a man approached the publisher with the positive assurance that he could arrange the whole affair within a fortnight. (In parenthesis it may be said that such men were not uncommon that summer.) The publisher, remembering the proverb concerning a bird in the hand, rushed to the nearest telegraph office and sent a message to the lady in Paris as follows:

"Suspend Dreyfus negotiations for the present. Will write."

The telegram was delivered, but almost simultaneously the lady was waited upon by a polite representative of the police department, with a demand for an explanation. What negotiations was she carrying on and with whom? She told her story and felt that it was received with the blandest incredulity. She promised to show the police the letter from London when it came, and reminded her visitor of her "American" citizenship. The official departed. Unfortunately, the press of business sent the publisher scurrying toward Scotland, and he, not realizing how important it was, neglected to write to the lady in Paris.

She soon discovered that she was being "shadowed," and that her every movement was being watched by mysterious people. At first she laughed, and merely sent a little note of enquiry to London. No answer came, and the watching continued. Her nerves began to give way, and finally she went to the United States ambassador with the whole story. The shadowing ceased. It would be interesting to know by just what diplomatic process this incident was arranged.

ASTHMA
EVERY BRINGS RELIEF.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-size bottle."

DRS. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO.:

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 130th street, New York. I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the 1st of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully,

O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle and I am ever grateful. I have a family of four children and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

A NOVEL

"I hope not," said Katharine, very quietly.

And that girl— that common, mean, poor, vulgar-natured girl— she was the woman whom Ormande loved! It was impossible to contemplate—it was horrible!

* * *

The preparations for Miss Mostyn's birthday fete went on apace. Brexley village was kept in a state of perpetual excitement and bustle, while the hall and the park were invaded each day by fresh gangs of workmen sent down from London to erect tents,and generally decorate the place in honor of such an auspicious occasion.

After that first brief and disagreeable interview with Miss Mostyn, Katharine had very little to do with the mistress of the hall. From the day following Barbara's return some fresh guest or other kept arriving, and it was with a sigh of decided relief that Katharine saw her employer so occupied with these arrivals that she had no time to waste in tyrannizing and insulting those in her power.

Katharine was not long in discovering that she shared Lady Drummond's dislike for a model village and establishment. As far as the surface went, Brexley and all appertaining to it was very well; but only half an inch beneath that surface, and what rots and barren places were to be found!

Katharine had not been an inmate of Brexley Hall three days before she knew that every domestic in the house or estate held their young mistress in perfect detestation. In the village it was the same.

Katharine's duties were not very heavy so far. She found that she was expected to write all Miss Mostyn's letters, dictated to her by Mrs. Trevanion, and to see that Miss Mostyn's sleeping apartments and boudoir were kept well supplied with hot-house flowers, all the latest periodicals and new books. As far as companionship went, she was never with Miss Mostyn, and apparently she had been engaged to amuse Mrs. Trevanion, and listen to her never ceasing flow of adulation about her sweet niece Barbara. Of course, all this might be altered after the fete, but Katharine did not know what to think of the future.

Miss Mostyn's birthday fell on a Wednesday, and on the Monday afternoon, as Katharine sat answering a batch of letters that had come by the middle-day post, Barbara entered the library. She was dressed in a delicate pink muslin gown, and her fingers glittered with rare diamonds while a bangle of the same precious stones hung on her right arm.

"Finish those letters quickly, Brereton," she said shortly. She never, by any chance, addressed our heroine except in the above curt fashion, a habit Mrs. Trevanion had soon adopted. "And then I want you to go into the village to do some commissions for me." Katharine put down the pen and waited for further orders; her face was perfectly cold and quiet. Barbara longed to strike the girl, or to rouse her into some ebullition of wrath. Why, she could not have said, except that she dimly felt the superiority of Katharine over herself in every way. "On second thoughts, you can go now," she said brusquely. "Aunt Mildred, you must finish these letters; it will take Brereton some time to get to the village and back, and I want her in the ball-room after dinner to play some waltzes for us. You play, of course?" this sharply to Katharine, who answered in the affirmative.

Barbara frowned again. If she could only find some excuse on which to pin a lecture that should bring this young woman to her bearings!

Fortune favored her.

As Katharine rose to her feet to give up her place to Mrs. Trevanion, Miss Mostyn drew a sharp breath,and a disagreeable expression came into her cold, light eyes.

"I wish to speak to you about your dress, too, Brereton," she said, in her most insolent way.

"My dress?"

Katharine glanced down at the one she was wearing; it was a dark red cotton made by herself, and copied from an old, quaint picture gown her father had designed for her years ago. There was absolutely no fault to find with such a simple, gracefully-draped gown, except the fault Miss Mostyn found, namely, that she had nothing so pretty in all her expensive wardrobe, and that, beside that tall form, that clear skin, those wondrous eyes shown to marvelous advantage by the deep red setting of the dress, she was absolutely nowhere.

"Yes, your dress," said Barbara angrily, "it is altogether too absurd for words, especially for any one in your position, Brereton; you will oblige me by changing it at once for something different, and in future you will wear a gown that I will have made for you. I strongly object to anything showy or theatrical," and all the while she was herself wearing a gown that had been copied from one worn by a celebrated Parisian actress.

Katharine was silent for a moment, then, as she moved to the door, she said very quietly:

"You shall have no reason to complain of my dress in future, Miss Mostyn; although please let me assure you that nothing will induce me to wear any gown other than those I provide myself. I will return for your orders in five minutes."

Mrs. Trevanion literally gasped as she was alone with her niece.

"Well, of all the ——! Barbara, you will send her away at once, of course, my darling? After such an insult, you ——"

"No, she shall not go yet, Aunt Mildred," was Miss Mostyn's reply, given very deliberately. "I have not finished with her; she wants to be taught her proper place, and"—with a vicious clench of her right hand —"I think I shall know how to do it. These are the instructions when she comes down. I must go back to the garden now; the others will wonder what has become of me, I have been away so long."

When Katharine re-entered the library she had on a black cashmere gown, relieved only by white collar and cuffs, and a small black bonnet from out of which her face looked exquisitely sweet and lovely.

Once out of sight of the hall, Katharine unfurled her umbrella and gave a deep sigh, while unconsciously two tears rolled down her cheeks.

She felt disheartened, miserable, utterly lonely and far from strong. Her lameness was fast going, but her foot and ankle were unpleasantly feeble, and she dreaded the effect of this long walk to and from the village in all the heat of an August sun.

"Miss Mostyn takes little pains to show her dislike and antipathy to me," she thought bitterly as she walked on at as quick a pace as she could muster up. "What is it, I wonder, that makes her hate me? What have I done to her that she should take such delight in insulting and wounding me? Surely it cannot be her nature alone that prompts her to be so rude and ungenerous to one who is in her employment." She heaved another sigh. "I am afraid that, like the unlucky fish, I have jumped from the frying-pan into the fire," she smiled faintly as she brushed away the tears from her eyes; "but there is nothing to do but to bear it for a time, unless it gets altogether beyond me. Until I am paid my quarter's salary, I have not a penny in the wide world; not that I regret having made over my modest income to Cousin Lucy. No, no; I am only too glad to have done so; but —but, I did not think my lines would have fallen in such uncomfortable places Work I expected, and I welcome it but insult —gratuitous, never-ceasing insult —did not enter into my calculations. Perhaps," Katharine mused on with a shiver, "perhaps this is my punishment for sharing Gordon's guilty secret, for shielding him from the just punishment of his crime! Have I done wrong? Oh, if Heaven would but send me one word of comfort to help me now in this my trouble!"

Katharine was very pale and worn when she reached the village, and she was thankful to accept a chair at the door of one of the cottages, for her ankle was giving her such pain, she she felt as if she would faint.

But courage was one of her strong characteristics, and notwithstanding her fatigue and weakness, Katharine, with many words of thanks to the kind-hearted woman who had given her the chair, moved on to execute her orders.

One of these was to go to the station and inquire if some boxes had arrived for Miss Mostyn. Barbara might have spared her companion this unnecessary task, seeing that the wagonette and dog-cart were to meet the express to bring back some fresh guests, but she resolved to crush down Katharine's proud, calm bearing, and it was a petty gratification to her to know that this girl was toiling to obey her behests like any ordinary servant.

The boxes had come, and Katharine having given orders that they should be sent up to the hall at once, left the booking and parcel office, and went out of the station. The express had arrived while she had been making inquiries, and a group of laughing, chattering people were gathered round the wagonette and dog-cart. Katharine recognizing the hall carriages shrank back instinctively,and, turning away, walked as quickly as she could down the road.

"I will let them pass me, and then I will sit down and rest again," she said to herself; "Miss Mostyn would be horrified if her guests were to see her companion actually sitting in the road."

The wagonette soon bowled along, and the dog-cart followed, and Katharine was glancing about for some good resting-place as the carriage vanished in the distance, when a voice behind her sent her heart leaping in her throat, and the quick blood mantling her pale cheeks. The next moment Ormande had hold of both her hands, and was shaking them wildly, vigorously, a fact of which he himself was not aware.

"Did I startle you?" he asked hurriedly, seeing how white her cheeks had grown again. "I am sorry! I knew you in a moment, but I would not run after you till all the others had gone on, then I determined to join you and walk back with you to the hall. Are you glad to see me Miss Brereton?"

Poor Katharine glad to see him! If he could only know the rush of mad joy that came over her as she gazed into his honest, blue eyes! Glad to see him! Why, it was like a glimpse of Paradise itself!

"I—I did not know you were coming," she faltered, scarcely knowing what she said.

"Didn't Miss Mostyn tell you? Oh, I felt I must come to her birthday fete; it would never do for me to neglect that, and— and, I daresay you will hardly believe me,Miss Brereton, when I say I have literally been longing to come ever since—well, ever since you saw me last."

Katharine understood him, so she thought. It was Barbara he was longing to see! Barbara for whom he had come! Happy, happy Barbara!

"I am going to sit down for awhile, and then you must walk on, Lord Otway," she said, sinking as she spoke under a welcome clump of trees. "I—I have some commissions to do, and they will wonder what has become of you if you don't go."

She was longing for him to leave her; she was afraid if he did not go she should lose all her self-restraint and burst into tears, she felt so weak and wretched.

"You shall make me do whatever you like, except leave you, Miss Brereton," he said, simply and tenderly. "And now for my news. I know you will be pleased when I tell you that perhaps, all our doubts and griefs may end; that Marian Adair may yet be happy with her brother's love.Miss Brereton, I am thankful to tell you that I have found a clue to trace out poor Craven Adair!" .

CHAPTER XIII.

"To trace out poor Craven!"

Katharine echoed the words in a dull, set way; she was conscious of nothing but an overwhelming sense of horror, mingled with shame and pain unfathomable; for a moment she was half stunned.

"It was by the merest chance," Ormande went on, resolutely turning his eyes from her pale face, that he might not be tempted to startle her by suddenly pouring out a flood of passionate love words, and thus losing the strange look of anguish and fear that had crept into Katharine's countenance. "You may remember I told you I feared that the poor boy had got into bad company Miss Brereton; well, my fears were only too well realized, for on searching as far as I could through Craven's accustomed haunts, I discovered he had made friends with a set of men who are the biggest scoundrels unhung. Does it bore you to hear this Miss Brereton?" He still kept his eyes studiously turned from hers, and her hurriedly murmured, "No, no,"did not ring strangely in his ears.

Prudence, worldly consideration, everything was swallowed up in the love that had suddenly come to him; what was the wealth of the Indies compared to this girl's love? — this beautiful, pure-faced girl, who would be his saint and his wife, too,he prayed Heaven. He had never met the woman before, whom he could associate as a daily, an hourly companion in the life which he had chosen. There were none who seemed to him to have sympathy with his vocation, none, till he met Katharine; and then all at once Ormande wondered how it was he managed to live without her all these years; and he fell to dreaming of the future, of the comfort and happiness they would have working together among his beloved poor, in the crowded London parish. It was curious Lord Otway never built up any plans as to his future, when he should be the Earl of Thanecourt; all his ambition was wrapped up in his present lot, and now with this sudden and wonderful love that had come to him, utterly bewildering him with its sweet, rare fragrance, the young man felt as if he had no words deep or grateful enough in which to thank Heaven for its goodness.

"How kind you are, Miss Brereton," he said, with his tender voice, as Katharine murmured that "No, no."

"Somehow you invite a fellow to confide in you, there is such an atmosphere of comfort and sympathy about you. Ah, if only poor Craven could have met you."

Katharine bit her pale lip; suddenly she recalled with a rush of unconquerable agony the time when she had met Craven Adair, the sense of trust and liking the poor boy had awakened in her unsuspecting breast. Ah, little did she think that bygone summer evening, as she refused to let him carry her basket and walk into Ledstone with her, how the day would come when she would have given almost her life itself to have seen him standing before her as he stood then— and now he was dead! She had seen him killed, she had made no effort to save him, she had only consented to shield his murderer, and keep him from his just reward. What would Ormande say when he came to know the truth!— he had found a clue.

Katharine waited dully to hear the rest. She sat, limp and utterly unable to move, on the tree clump, and in that moment she sent up a prayer that Heaven would be merciful to her, and let this mental misery cease, if needs be, with her life.

Meanwhile, Lord Otway was going on hurriedly:

"If he could have had you for a friend, what unhappiness might have been spared to us all! However, I must not bewail that, the future may even yet be kind to him, and he may yet call you fri——"

Katharine woke from the sort of mental trance into which she had lapsed; her ears buzzed with the sudden rush of blood caused by the wild throbbing of her heart.

What was it he was saying? What——

Ormande was looking at the trees opposite; he had grown rosy red at the blissful future he called up for himself as he uttered the last words. Katharine could be Craven's friend, and his wife. His wife! What music ever had more exquisite ring in it than those two words!

"For the poor boy is not dead, Miss Brereton," he went on quickly, careful not to startle her by any hint or allusion yet to that future. "We shall have him among us again one day soon, I hope."

"Not dead!"

Katharine uttered the words as well as her stiff, pale lips could manage. What —what did he mean? Her heart almost ceased its beat in her mingled surprise, agitation and alarm.

"No; he is only gone abroad. He has not treated us very well, has he Miss Brereton? and his conduct to poor Marian is scarcely to be forgiven; but he was in great difficulties. I learnt all this from a fellow clerk of his, who had known for some time that Craven was distressed and troubled, but did not think things were so bad. This clerk has helped me considerably, and it is to him and to your cousin, Mr. Gordon Smythe, that I am indebted for the information I have received."

Katharine rose to her feet suddenly, clutching at a low bough of a tree near to steady herself.

"And," she asked, in a curiously constrained, quiet voice, "what —what did my cousin, Gordon Smythe, tell you had become of——"

Ormande turned hurriedly.

"Never mind about that," he answered, eagerly. "Craven is safe, so that is all right. I wish —I only wish I felt as comfortable, and contented about — about your health, Miss Brereton, as I do about him. You know you are no more fit to be out walking on this hot, hard road than I am fit to fly. Really——"

"I am quite well," Katharine broke in with such curt, cold tones that Ormande unconsciously flinched, and bit his lip.

"She resents my speaking so familiarly to her," he thought to himself, quickly and sadly. "Well, she is right, she is alone, and she is so proud, so very proud, my beautiful darling!"

"I must be alone —alone!" was the one desire in her mind, and as it grew greater it forced itself into words.

"Please go on, Lord Otway," she said, almost sharply; "Miss Mostyn expects you, she——"

"Miss Mostyn would not expect me to leave you weak and ill on the road, I am sure," was Ormande's reply, given gravely, and with no idea how far out he was in his opinion on Barbara's character.

"I do not care what Miss Mostyn would wish," Katharine cried, passionately and harshly, forgetting everything but her wild craving for him to be gone. "I desire you to leave me. At once, Lord Otway, at once."

Katharine watched him go with a pang of bitter pain. The news that he had met Gordon, that Gordon had dared to have uttered such a terrible lie, simply overwhelmed her.

"Am I mad?" she asked herself mutely, as she still clutched the gnarled bough of the tree with her ice-cold fingers, "or is it some awful, some horrible dream? Let me try and think it all out.

"Gordon has lied to him. He has taken Craven Adair's life, and now —now he has lied to him, and says the boy still lives." She shuddered with irrepressible horror. "He is not a man at all, he must be a fiend! —

What Became of the Pompeiians?

MAX NORDAU raises an interesting question concerning Pompeii. He writes as follows to the "Neue Freie Presse" (Vienna):—

"One thing has always been a puzzle to me. Here was a flourishing city of about 30,000 inhabitants, most of whom evidently were well-to-do. A few hundreds, at most, lost their lives in the destruction of the city; the rest escaped. The eruption of Vesuvius continued only a few days, after which the district returned to its usual placid condition. In many places the deposit of ashes and lava was only a yard thick, and it was not more than three yards thick at any point yet excavated.

"How did it happen that these 30,000 homeless persons showed no desire to return to their beautiful houses, so well built that they are standing to this day, and which could have been restored, at the time, with very little labor? Why did they not make the slightest attempt to regain their valuable property in land and buildings, furniture, bronze, gold, silver and jewels? Did the men of that time have so little love of home that they could leave it without a backward glance at the first unpleasantness? Were the Pompeiians so rich that the loss of their perfectly appointed homes appeared trivial to them, so that they preferred settling elsewhere to restoring their city? Or did superstition prevent the attempt?

"This indifferent renunciation of their patrimony by a whole cityful is to me an insoluble enigma which forces itself the more strongly upon my attention now as I walk along the finely paved streets between houses which need only new roofs to make them again habitable."

For Sale—An Island Kingdom.

The chance is now open to any millionaire to own an island kingdom or to become a Highland lord and live in an historic castle. The advertisement offering these estates appeared in some United States newspapers, and was signed by the business agent of the Duke of Argyll.

"The Island Kingdom of Tiree," as the advertisement calls it, is one of the Inner Hebrides, an island about thirteen miles long and nowhere more than six miles wide. It is only twenty feet above the level of the sea, and there are hardly any trees on it; but the land is mostly fertile, and the tenants, who live by farming, cattle-raising and fishing, pay the duke rentals aggregating more than fifteen thousand dollars a year.

"Excellent winter bathing, good golf links, splendid beaches, safe bathing and good sea-fishing" are some of the island's attractions that might be expected to appeal to a purchaser.

Inverary Castle, Argyllshire, the ancestral abode of the Dukes of Argyll, is also advertised; but it is not an ancient building. The oldest part of it dates back to a period not earlier than 1750, and much of the castle has been rebuilt since 1877.

The scenes pictured by Scott in the "Legend of Montrose" were supposed to have taken place in what is known as the "old" castle, which stood near the sea and has been quite swept away. No such romantic interest attaches to the present castle.

But the man who buys the island kingdom of Tiree—or Tyree, as some of the books call it—will probably find in modern fiction a good many allusions to it. From the novels of William Black alone might be compiled a pretty good guide-book to the Hebrides, islands that, as another admirer has said, are "beautiful in calm, wonderful in storm."

President Loubet's Wardrobe

A correspondent of the "Cri de Paris" has ascertained certain facts in regard to President Loubet's wardrobe which are being copied with extraordinary avidity by the Parisian and provincial press. It seems that M. Loubet has five Prince Albert coats—two for summer, two for winter, and one extra for grand occasions. This last one has been worn only three times—at the opening of the exposition of 1900, at the reception of the King of Sweden, and at the garden party in honor of the Shah of Persia. This "gala" coat differs from the others in that it has heavy silk lining and lapels. M. Loubet invariably wears a plain, black satin tie— not tied by hand, but sewn together and attached with a clasp. M. Loubet used formerly to wear false cuffs, but one day, while making a sudden gesture, the right-hand cuff slipped off and rolled on the floor. This happened at the Luxembourg Palace, when M. Loubet was president of the Senate. Since then, M. Loubet's shirts have been made with permanently attached wristbands. M. Loubet's trousers are very peculiar. They are black or gray in color, but their cut is of the old-fashioned pattern, with the top of the trousers coming up as high as the armpits. M. Loubet has always worn trousers of this quaint type, and is so accustomed to them that he has an inveterate dislike for evening clothes, which, with low-cut, open waistcoat, render the armpit trousers impossible. The president's wardrobe is, however, provided with several pairs of evening trousers suitable for low-cut, open waistcoats.

Australia's Governor-General.

It is feared in some quarters that the Earl of Hopetoun will not be able to complete his term as Governor-General of Australia. His Lordship has never entirely shaken off the effects of the illness which prostrated him in India on his way out to Australia, and though he was really prominent as the host of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall, he has since, owing to his unsatisfactory health, been unable to fulfill many of his public engagements.

Proof Adduced.

"Everybody says the baby is just like me."

"What nonsense. Why, it hasn't said a word since it was born."

A Hopeless Case.

"Are the Gugglesons in such reduced circumstances?" "Oh, yes. Why, I understand they are obliged now to live within their income."—N.Y. "Life."

Passenger cars (or coaches, as they are usually designated) in early days were simply stage coach bodies mounted on four wheels, and as time progressed several were linked together, thus forming a "train."

Wood pulp paper as military clothing is used by the Japanese troops. It is marvelously tough, and has an appearance that might well be regarded with satisfaction for summer wear. It holds stitching uncommonly well while its warmth is undoubted.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of The Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. Johns, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Cancer Attacks the Middle-Aged

It is a well known fact, that any physician will substantiate, that there is a greater percentage of Cancer among those of midlife than at any other age.

Persons at this time of life, would do well to regard with suspicion, any lumps or growths on their body. Should these prove malignant or of a cancerous nature, they can be removed completely without operation, by the use of our painless home treatment.

It is the most successful remedy for the cure of cancers and tumors and has cured numbers of people here in Canada and saved them from the torture of the surgeon's knife or the painful plaster.

The Flaming Arrow To-Night

Lincoln J. Carter's new romantic drama, "The Flaming Arrow," introducing Go-Wan-Go, the only Indian actress in the world, appears in the Opera House to-night. The plan is rapidly filling up; secure your tickets early. Prices, 25, 35, 50 and 75c.

The Winter Races

It seems as though there will be no races this winter as interest in the meeting is apparently falling off. A meeting was called for last night but nobody attended. A canvass has been made of some of the merchants and others and very little encouragement has been given.

Walter Won the Game

From the Pittsburg Dispatch we learn that Mr. Walter Phelan won the game for the lacrosse club of that city against the Queen's, which was played last Wednesday night. Walter is a sure winner every time, which shows that his early training in Peterborough was of the right kind.

Trading Stamps

Ashburnham Civic Association

The Ashburnham Civic Association held a meeting in the Town Hall, Ashburnham, last night. There was a good attendance and the speakers of the evening were listened to with marked interest. Messrs. Adams and Collins addressed the meeting on the Beet Sugar Industry, and Mr. R. B. Rogers read a very able paper on "Sewers and Sewage," and discussed the sanitary condition of Ashburnham. The election of officers was postponed till the next meeting.

Vaccination Continues

The doctors at the Town Council Chamber were kept busy yesterday vaccinating people and issuing certificates of successful vaccination to those vaccinated a week ago. The public should take advantage of the vaccination at the Council Chamber, and every one should attend, as the bylaw may be enforced and this would save considerable trouble.

To-day the following doctors will be in attendance to vaccinate and give certificates of successful vaccination to those who were treated on Wednesday last:

10 to 11 a.m.—Drs. Pigeon and Young.
11 to 12 noon—Drs. Burnham and McGrath.
2 to 3 p.m.—Drs. Brown and Caldwell.
3 to 4 p.m.—Drs. Bradd and Moher.
4 to 5 p.m.—Drs. McPhail and Bi[illegible].

HE HITS HARD.

Good, Old King Coffee.

People don't realize what a savage tyrant coffee is. It gets the upper hand and one of the reasons it maintains its power is that people do not believe that coffee is doing the deadly work, but they wake up once in a while.

A lady in Norfolk, Va. writes an interesting experience. "Some months ago a friend who was calling asked if I wanted to read a sweet letter, and as I read it she brushed her tears away. It was from a beautiful christian woman, the mother of her husband.

The doctor had told her that they could not give her any encouragement, that she would never be well again, and in her sweet, christian way she wrote regarding her approaching death, saying she had relinquished and was quietly awaiting the coming of the grim reaper.

The husband sent for his mother who was just able to be moved. When I called I found she was suffering from a most aggravated stomach and bowel trouble, being in pain most of her time, and she could hardly retain enough nourishment to keep her alive although she was always hungry and craving food, but not daring to touch it because of the agony it brought her.

I found she was a coffee drinker and insisted that she quit the coffee and take Postum Food Coffee with some Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food. I had gone through a wonderful experience myself and knew the value of both Postum and Grape-Nuts.

I went right to work and made her a cup of Postum the first thing, which she drank and liked it wonderfully well. She made the change and began to improve in a few days. She has gradually gotten better and better, and, of course, I have been much interested in her recovery.

A short time ago I met her daughter-in-law and asked how her mother was getting on. She said, "Wonderfully well. She is a new woman. She has entirely recovered her health and spirits, and just to think it was by the simple act of leaving off that poisonous coffee and taking on Postum Food Coffee and Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food.'"

This letter was written by Mrs. M. L. Eggleston, of Port Norfolk, Va. There is a wonderful lesson that thousands of people can learn, that of leaving off narcotics and poisonous drugs like coffee and using plain, natural liquid and solid food containing the elements the Creator intended for man's use.

A Record Year

Town Clerk Armstrong has just completed his official returns of births, marriages and deaths for the year 1901. The following are the figures as compared with those of 1900:

	Births	Marriages	Deaths
1900—	212	97	174
1901—	215	113	160

It will be observed by the above figures that there was an increase of 3 births, an increase of 16 marriages and a decrease of 14 in the number of deaths.

Boys Have Sailed

It is expected that the Peterborough members of the Canadian Mounted Rifles sailed yesterday from Halifax on the transport Manhattan. As most of the boys are in E and F squadrons, two of the squadrons which left yesterday. The friends of the boys will be anxiously waiting for the first news from the vessel which should report at Cape St. Vincent in a few days. There is a probability however that the vessel will not touch there and no word may be received from them until they arrive at Cape Town.

Will be no Dance

The Varsity Glee Club will visit Peterborough on the evening of Jan. 22nd, and many people were of the opinion that a dance would be given in their honor, but the young men of the town have been considering the matter and have decided not to hold one. The opera house is the only place for such an assembly and as the time would be very limited, the building could not be put in proper shape in time, and for this reason the matter has been dropped.

PETERBOROUGH AND THE CABINET

The Review seems to be critical of the Lakefield News because the latter has declared itself in support of Mr. Stratton as a candidate for the representation of West Peterborough. We congratulate the News because it has had the manliness to take a definite stand, and because that stand is one looking to the promotion of the best interests of the riding and of the town of Peterborough. Peterborough has been long enough in the background and now is the time we need a friend at court, that is to say, that it is decidedly in the interests of the town to have as its representative a Cabinet Minister and Member of the Government so that this town will be represented both in the House and in the Government, who will have greater opportunities in this double capacity to give this town more effective service than he was ever able to do in an ordinary representative capacity. That is not to say that Mr. Stratton has not well done his duty by Peterborough in the past. But we now need all the friends and all the influence we can reasonably command. Peterborough is on the eve of great development, and the great industries now coming into operation are only a beginning of what our facilities warrant, and our ambition urges us to try to accomplish. We are on the highway to a higher realization of what our future as a manufacturing centre and centre of population should be. Anyone familiar with affairs knows that in doing things friends with connections, business, financial and otherwise, can, where the will is added, do much to help forward the progress of the town. Mr. Stratton has been a good friend to Peterborough in the past. He is known as an energetic and indefatigable worker; he never lets pass unheeded a chance to do the town a good turn, and since he has become a Minister, his zeal for Peterborough's interest seems to have increased with his increased capacity to serve the interests of the town. This may seem to be a narrow and parochial view to take of a representative's relations. But we have reason to know that while Mr. Stratton discharges his official duties most successfully and carefully—improving the service with decreased expenditure, among the benefits of his business knowledge and experience—his capacity for work leaves him ample opportunity for helping this town and this riding. We have the best town in Canada, better than most of the minor cities, so called, and we want to use every aid available, and employ the services of the most powerful and influential friends we have. One of these is the Provincial Secretary, and it seems to be a pertinent question to consider whether or not our interests do not demand that the services we have tested to our advantage should be retained. The Times in the coming campaign will heartily give its support to Mr. Stratton from the Peterborough standpoint.

At the closing of the business of the court the brothers adjourned to the dining hall, where refreshments were served by Bros. W. Drake and W. Taylor in excellent style.

HUNT CLUB SHOOT

Eagle Lake Hunt Club Wins the Oysters by Default

The much talked of shooting match which was the outcome of considerable boasting on the part of different members of the Gold and Eagle Hunt Clubs, was called for yesterday afternoon at 1.30.

The referee was on the ranges sharp on time, and in a few minutes the members of the Eagle Lake Club began to arrive, and after waiting nearly all afternoon for the Gold Lake Hunters, the referee gave decision in favor of the Eagle Lake Club, by default, as only one member of the Gold Lake Club had turned up.

The Eagle Lakers, under the leadership of their staunch ex-captain, Geo. Fitzgerald, were on hand, armed with their rapid firing guns, and eager for the fray.

The oyster supper, which was to be the prize shot for, will be given in the Palace restaurant to-night, and all members of the two clubs are invited to be present.

List of Officers Elected at the Meeting Held Last Night in the Hall on Simcoe St.

At a meeting of the Orange Order in their hall on Simcoe street last night, the following officers were elected:

District Master—Bro. John H. Briggs, No. 697.
Deputy Master—Bro. Geo. Mann, No. 90.
Chaplain—Bro. W. A. Kindred, No. 90.
District Recording Secretary—Bro. G. Barkley, No. 90.
Financial Secretary—Bro. R. T. Groove, No. 231.
Treasurer—Bro. T. A. Young, No. 178.
Director of Ceremonies—Bro. R. Campbell, No. 697.
District Lecturer—Bro. Maxwell R. Weir, No. 178.

The newly elected officers were then installed by Bro. R. Weir, Past County Master, Past Grand Master Royal Black Knights, B. N. A.

Mr. Trollope's Appointment

Yesterday Mr. Frank Trollope left to assume the position of Physical Director at Trinity College school, Port Hope.

Mr. Trollope's appointment to this important position not only reflects credit on the good judgment on the part of the management, but reflects credit on the staff of the physical department of the Y.M.C.A., where Mr. Trollope received his training. For some time he has been a member of what is known as the Leader's Class, and has taken a deep interest in work of the department, where he has been a great assistance to the Physical Director.

His many friends in town will heartily congratulate him on his appointment to such an important position.

Assembly to be Held

At a meeting of the non-coms and men of the 57th Regiment in the drill hall on Monday evening, it was decided to hold an assembly on or about Jan. 31st. Committees were appointed to make the preliminary arrangements. It has not yet been decided how large the affair will be, but as it will be under the auspices of the regiment, it will likely be on an extensive scale. The non-coms and men are to be congratulated on the enthusiasm they are displaying throughout the winter months in the affairs of the regiment.

[Ed. Note.—We are pleased to see the regiment in a flourishing condition and think it is nearly time that a strong move be made to induce the government to build a new shed here. The present one has seen better days and is now altogether out-of-date, and in a military centre like this we should have a first-class armouries.]

MISTAKE SOMEWHERE

W. J. Stumps is at Present Residing in Peterborough

The Lindsay Post says: "The Belleville papers a few days ago contained news of the death, near Buffalo, of W. J. Stump, some years ago clerk in the Benson House here, and later engaged in the hotel business in Belleville. Mr. T. W. Greer, agent for the British Empire Ass. Co., issued a policy for $2,000 on his life to Mrs. Stump, now in Toronto, but has not yet received the claim papers."

—There is evidently a mistake in this notice as W. J. Stumps is working in town at the Oxford Hotel, and judging from his appearance is very much alive.

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

London Directors, F. Bruch, C. J. Palmer and D. Symons London Secretary H. L. Claridge. The company was registered October 2nd, 1895, under the laws of the Transvaal, and holds upwards of 2,000 claims in the districts of Klerksdorp and Potchefstroom. The authorised capital is £600,000 in shares of £1, of which £500,000 has been issued and paid up. The accounts are made up annually to August 31st, and submitted in Johannesburg about November. In a circular issued in November, 1899, it was stated that the company had then in London cash and liquid assets for £110,000 besides holding 62,000 shares of £1 in the Main Reef West Company, Ltd. No report was received last year but this notice has been officially revised. A register of shares is kept in London.

Advices from London predict a substantial rise in "Klerksdorp", the present price being 15 shillings as against a price of £3 15 s. before the war.

100 shares of this stock at 15 shillings per share—$365.62: 20 per cent of which is $73.12, balances carried at 6 per cent.

We buy and sell either for cash or on 20 per cent margin.

Write for our booklet on South African mines, which will be ready about the end of the month. As only a limited number will be issued they will be mailed in the order in which applications are received. It will contain a great deal of information and will be a useful reference book.

Quotations received daily by cable.

Information furnished on any of the South African stocks.

The Most Perfect Stove Made

THE STAR

PATENTED 10TH MARCH, 1894.

For hard or soft coal, coke or peat. The only coal stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

THE STAR is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion———why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

THE STAR has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica,

After being filled the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

THE STAR is 25 per cent. more economical than any other stove.

More than 5,000 are in use in the lower provinces.

PRICE LIST

No.	Height	Diameter.	Price.
0	24½ in.	9 in.	$11.80
1	30½ in	9 in.	12.00
2	34 in.	10½ in.	15.00
3	37½ in.	12 in.	19.20
4	41 in.	15 in.	28.80

DIRECTIONS

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention.

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room, the size of which is 45 by 33 feet, with 15 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other. ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No. 3 "Star" stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The "Star" gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal. MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 STAR coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star and it requires a minimum of attention. TIMES PRINTING CO.

BOTHA GIVEN A HOT RUN BY HAMILTON

Large Numbers of His Followers Fall Into Hands Of the British Under Hamilton

FORCE OF BOERS GET THROUGH THE LINES

Various Officers Report Successes in Orange River Colony—Many Small Captures Made by British

London, Jan. 16.—Lord Kitchener reports to the War Office that general Louis Botha just escaped General Bruce Hamilton after a seven-mile chase. One Boer was killed and 33 taken prisoners. Some rifles, cattle etc., were captured.

Hearing of a concentration of Boers at Knapdaar, Bruce Hamilton went to the spot, but only to find the Boers had been given the alarm and four hundred of them were trekking three miles distant, with General Botha in a Cape cart, leading. Bruce Hamilton chased the Boers, as has been stated, until his horses gave in.

MANY SMALL CAPTURES.

Ladybrand, Orange River Colony, Jan 14.—At midnight Sunday twenty five Boers galloped between the blockhouses near Thaba N'chu, forty miles east of Bloemfontein, under a heavy British fire. They were making in the direction of Dewetsdorp and were supposed to have been part of Commandant Brand's force.

Two Boers of the Ladybrand commando came in here on Sunday and surrendered.

Col. Delisle has occupied Kaffirkop, killing one Boer.

An enormous amount of grain has been burned in the course of the clearing operations in the north-east of the Orange River Colony.

AMERICAN WORKMEN SLAVES

London, Jan. 16.—In the Trades and Labor Gazette, the organ of the London trade unionists, Mr. James MacDonald, its editor, who is also Secretary of the London Trades Council, has the following very brotherly remarks to make about his fellow workers in United States apropos apparently of Ben Tillett's visit to America:

"The American workman, it appears to us, may grumble less and more readily respond to the invitation of his capitalist taskmaster because he is a better broken-in animal. He recognizes capital as king and fully understands that the capitalist owns him body and soul and that he must lay at the feet of his king, capital, all his physical and intellectual energies and fight his battles. He is entirely the creature of capital and has no more real independence than the machine he works. He claims to be the most independent worker on earth, but that independence is, nevertheless, entirely subject to a money value, and up to the present he has sold it to the highest bidder.

"Industrially and politically the American worker in the political sense is the most degraded of creatures—most degraded because his opportunities are greatest. American workmen do but obey their animal instincts when they favor the survival of any particular group of employers, for it is under such a group that they live and have their being."

LONDON' SMALLPOX EPIDEMIC

Efforts to Check the Disease Have Not Been Successful.

London, Jan. 16.—The present outbreak of smallpox in London remains very serious in spite of the efficient means of arresting the disease and the sanitary precautions. The figures show no sign of decrease. Since May of last year 2,273 cases have been certified and thirty-two fresh patients were taken to the hospital yesterday. The number now being treated at the institutions of the Metropolitan Asylums Board is 878.

The Public Health Committee of the County Council has posted an urgent appeal to all citizens to be vaccinated. The medical officer of the county of London declares that there are reasons for believing that greater prevalence of the disease is to be expected for some time. He compares the recurrence of smallpox epidemics to great waves. There was one in 1838 and another in 1871. He argues that another is now due, which will probably become general throughout the world, as did the previous epidemics.

The patients in London are not treated in hospital buildings, but in a number of hospital ships fifteen miles down the Thames or in shelters erected in unfrequented districts on the banks of the river. Houses are rigorously inspected, and where infection has been found they are thoroughly fumigated, and when the diseased person is removed the other inmates are quarantined.

In spite of all this there has been a gradual and steady spread of smallpox since May.

KING EDWARD PREDICTS SPEEDY END OF WAR

His Majesty, in Advising a Reinforcing Draft of 1,200 Guards Makes Use of Hopeful Words Regarding the Struggle

London, Jan. 15.

It has for some time been considered that the South African war was on its last legs, that the process of wearing down the Boers had proceeded so rapidly that the enemy had practically disappeared as a serious factor and that one of the most momentous conflicts in which the empire has ever been engaged was nearing its termination having been waged since October, 1899, continuously to the present time. This belief has now been confirmed by no less a personage than King Edward VII. himself. This morning His Majesty reviewed a draft of 1,200 men, consisting of Grenadiers, Coldstreams and Scots, who start for South Africa tomorrow, and in addressing the officers, said that "The war might now be regarded as approaching its conclusion." The King's speech, otherwise, was not important. He was accompanied by the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, the Duke of Cambridge, and Lord Roberts, surrounded by brilliant staffs. A large gathering of privileged guests viewed the function.

A JANUARY WEDDING

A very pretty wedding took place at "Hillcrest," at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Coons, Lakehurst, New Year's night, when their daughter, Alberta, was married to Mr. G. Melville Cundal, of Cameron, Ont. The bride looked charming in a beautiful gown of white cashmere, trimmed with chiffon and satin ribbon. Miss Ethel Coons, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, while Mr. Will Cundal performed the duties of best man. Miss Jennie Shaw played the wedding march, and Rev. R. A. Delve tied the nuptial knot. The gift of the groom to the bride was a beautiful gold watch and to the bridesmaid a gold ring.

The presents were many and valuable and testified to the popularity of the bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Cundal intend taking up their residence in Cameron, where they will be followed by the best wishes of a host of friends.

Those present from a distance were, Miss Minnie Cundal, Mr. Will Cundal, Mr. Wilson Cundal, Mrs. Thos Northey and Dr. Sumnell, of Bobcaygeon.

A SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Mr. M. C. Dickson, the genial and enterprising District Passenger Agent of the Grand Trunk Railway, was in town yesterday on business, and found time to give The Times a friendly call.

Mr. Dickson reports a very successful year's business over his road, being in many respects the largest in years.

Referring to the new up-town ticket office of the company, Mr. Dickson considers it the finest office in the district and the fact of so fine an office here, reflects credit on the town.

The office in town has done a very large business during the past year and reflects considerable credit on Mr. W. Bunton, the genial and accommodating up-town ticket agent of the company. May his shadow never grow less.

BRITISH SHIP BELIEVED TO HAVE BEEN BLOWN UP BY A BOER SPY

Captain of a Vessel Says that the Range of the Dead Stock Covers at Least Forty Miles

Hundreds of Floating Dead Mules—The News Has Greatly Stirred Shippers Here Who Fear That Further Desperate Attempts will be Made to Stop Export of Mules to Cape Town

New Mrleans, La., Jan. 16.—If reports which are current in this city prove correct one of the most sensational stories of the Boer war is about to be unfolded. It is believed in shipping circles that a British transport laden with American mules bound for South Africa has been blown up by a Boer spy in the Gulf of Mexico or has foundered. A schooner arriving on the lower coast reports hundreds of dead mules floating for a distance of 30 miles. This news has greatly stirred shippers here, who fear that further desperate attempts will be made to stop the export of mules to Cape Town.

The more conservative elements attribute the floating carcasses to a disaster to one of the British vessels during the storms that have been raging near the coast this week.

Dispatches from Quintana, Texas, which is only a short distance south of Port Eads, say that the schooner Olga has put into Matagorda Bay to shelter from the fierce gale blowing on the Gulf, and that Captain George Peterson reports having seen long rows of dead cattle and mules floating in the waters. He describes the range of the dead stock as covering at least forty miles.

Matthew Warriner, of the Elder-Dempster Steamship Company, which furnishes many of the British transports, states that all their transports have been accounted for except one sailing from here three days ago. They had heard nothing of her.

The recent attempt to blow up the British transport Mechanician in this port is called by those persons who incline to the opinion that a British transport has been blown up. The attempt to destroy the Mechanician was charged to Boer agents.

Holland is to Have Trouble with Its East Indian Colonies

The Hague, Jan. 16—A powerful attack on the Government's management of affairs in the Dutch East Indies continues to be made by Heit Volk, the Socialist organ of Amsterdam. The charges, which will probably be aired in Parliament, include the accusation that the Acheen war is being conducted by the Dutch army on lines of cruelty and barbarity.

It is also said gross venality has been discovered in connection with the Jambi war involving high civil and military officials.

Dutch colonists in the East Indies are said to treat the native population like cattle, contractors furnishing droves of young men and women workers for service in factories and on plantations under conditions that amount to slavery.

LONDON'S ANNUAL BUDGET

It Costs Over $50,000,000 Every Year to Run the Big City.

London, Jan. 14.—Statistics taken from the new edition of the London Manual show that the total annual cost of London government is £10,002,373, which is about 72 shillings per head of the population. The borough councils spend £2,884,380. The Boards of Guardians spend £2,513,714 and the School Board spends £2,402,951. The expenditure of the London County Council is £2,247,945.

Street improvements carried out by the County Council and not included in the above figures have cost £5,929,320 in the twelve years ending March, 1901, which is the period that the County Council has been in existence. The Metropolitan Board of Works in the thirty-three years of its existence spent £11,616,974 on the streets of London, including the construction of the Thames Embankment.

A True Brain Food

must replace the feeling of lassitude and mental tiredness by clearness and strength of mind. Not that it goes directly to the brain, that were foolish. The true brain food must be carried by rich red blood. If mental fatigue worries and alarms you, look not to the brain, but the stomach and assimilative organs. No remedy yet discovered, possesses the marvellous brain strengthening power that Ferrozone has demonstrated in thousands of cases. Ferrozone does not stimulate the brain into a fitful glow, but by improving digestion, strengthening the nervous system, stimulating assimilation, giving new strength to the heart, it sends a stream of red vitalizing blood to the brain. Thus it is a true brain food. Ferrozone is sold by Ormond & Walsh.

WASN'T PLEASED

Though a Reversal Wouldn't Have Changed the Situation.

Two bank clerks met on George St. the other day.

"Just going to lunch," says one. "Will you come?"

"Ditto," says No. 2.

"Two fried trout, please, waiter," on a dish, and two plates.

"One of the trout happens to be much larger than the other, and the dinner before whom the dish has been placed calmly passes the smaller fish to his companion.

"Now, I call that a mean trick," says the other.

"Why to pass me the smaller trout and retain the larger one for yourself," says No.2.

"What would you have done," says No. 1. "if you had been serving the fish?"

"I should certainly have passed you the larger one," says No. 2.

"Well, I have got the larger one," says No. 1; "what more do you want?"

Pain in the Back

makes life miserable. Can it be cured? Yes, in one night. Polson's Nerviline gives a complete knockout to pain in the back, for it penetrates through the tissues, takes out the soreness and pain, invigorates tired muscles, and makes you feel like a new man. Nerviline cures quickly because it is stronger, more penetrating, more highly pain-subduing than any other remedy. Don't suffer another minute, get Nerviline quick, and rub it in, for sure as you were born it will cure you. 25c.

REVOLT IN SERVIA SAID TO BE NEAR

Increasing Discontent at King Alexander's Weak and Vascillating Rule

NO MONEY, TROOPS UNPAID

This May be the Spark that Will Unite Europe in a Deadly Conflict—Russia Said to be Watching the East

Vienna, Jan. 16.—The following despatch, which may be relied upon as giving a faithful picture of the situation in Servia, has reached The Sun's Vienna correspondent to-day from a high quarter in Belgrade.

"The situation is truely alarming. Every one feels that a revolution is imminent. King Alexander is at this moment little more than an idiot. Queen Draga is queen both in fact and in name, and she and her grasping and avaricious family are directing the affairs of the country so far as they have any direction at all.

"Discontent is universal. The State treasury is empty. The Government is unable to pay the salaries of its employees, or even of the officers of its army. We shall wake some morning and find the army in possession of the capital and the King and Queen in flight or assassinated.

"The choice of a successor to the crown lies between Prince Peter Karageorgevitch, son-in-law of Prince Nicholas of Montenegro, and Col. Constantinovitch, uncle of King Alexander and an Obrenovitch on his mother's side. There is also a party in Servia which favors the election of the Prince of some reigning European house on the lines that have been adopted in Greece and Bulgaria. This party is for the moment lying low, but may become dominant."

London, Jan. 16.—Russia is quietly watching events in the east, and should break out in Servia, has her legions ready for instant action. The spark once lighted may break forth with a fearful and world-wide flame of conflict.

PETERBORO BOYS' SUCCESS

Mr. Herb Kent, Formerly of Town Doing Well in Vancouver

"Among the candidates for the park commissionership is Mr. Herbert Kent, manager of the local telephone company. Mr. Kent is a well known and highly respected citizen, and is one of Stanley park's most enthusiastic lovers. In pleasant weather he spends most of his spare time there. In the minds of most of us he has become identified with Stanley park by reason of his affection for it. He knows every nook and corner of it and is enthusiastic in plans for its improvement. Mr. Kent should make a very good park commissioner. The Province would like to see him elected."

GERMANY'S POLICY A VERY BAD ONE

Poultney Bigelow Says That America Won't Stand Any German Insult

BRITAIN IS STRONGER THAN EVER

The Great American Has a High Opinion of Britain and a Very Poor One of Germany

Minneapolis, Minn., Jan. 16—Within the last five years Poultney Bigelow, who is now in the city, has traveled over a great part of the globe, and his writings during that period have attracted more attention than those of earlier days.

During a long residence in Germany, Mr. Bigelow formed some very definite opinions concerning that country and its inhabitants. He expresses the opinion that if Americans, especially American newspapers, do not stop annoying and exasperating the Germans with their boasting of what American fleets could and would do under certain contingencies, and what a trouncing Germany would get if she ever had the temerity to war with this country, that Germany will some day pick up the gauntlet and try us out.

"And if she does,' said Mr. Bigelow, "while her forces will probably never come so far as Minneapolis, I want to make it plain to you that she will devastate our seacoasts to a moral certainty, and raze our coast cities.

"Much as has been done toward constructing a navy here, it amounts to very little by comparison with what will have to be done if we desire to make good our boasts.

"The sycophantic howl that is being rant up here about England in South Africa is as absurd as it is wrong. Americans should be the last people on earth to raise a word or a hand against England. England is greater than she ever was, and while I agree with Kipling in his reference to the 'muddied oafs at the wickets' etc., believing that the people take their wars too lightly and their sports too seriously, at the same time they will carry through to a finish anything they undertake, and that is pretty good fact to remember, especially by the so-called American invaders of British commerce, whose invasion has been accomplished by such a blatant fanfare of American trumpets."

DEBT REDUCED BY $2,000

Pastor and Congregation of the Charlotte Street Church to be Congratulated

The annual reports of the Finance Committees and Treasurers of the Charlotte street church were presented at the meeting of the Official Board on Tuesday evening.

The reports for the year 1901 were presented and were very encouraging and satisfactory, showing a healthy increase over preceding years in the returns of every department. The reports of the pew steward and the envelope committee showed the largest returns in the history of the church.

As a result of this excellent showing, all the management expenses have been paid, and the handsome sum of $2,000 taken from the amount of the church indebtedness.

Rev. Mr. Crossley and his liberal people are to be congratulated on this splendid achievement.

In Quebec, Conservatives gain Lavalle, electing Mr. Leonardis by 27 majority; Mr. Brunet, St. James' Division by 600 majority.

SUICIDE AT HAVELOCK

Lottie Taylor, Aged 15 Takes Her Own Life by Taking Strychnine

Lottie Taylor, the 15-year-old daughter of Mr. Thos. Taylor, a well-known and highly respected farmer living in Belmont Tp., committed suicide by taking strychnine on Saturday night last at Havelock. Dr. Jeffs, of Havelock, who was called to attend the case, and who notified Coroner Gray of the circumstances, states in his letter that he could discover no motive for the girl's awful act. The strychnine had been bought at a druggist's, and the girl said it was to poison two dogs with. On the night she took her life she was at home alone with her father, her mother and the other children were visiting in Dummer. During the night the father, who is in ill health, had occasion to call his daughter, but receiving no answer he went to her room and found her in bed, lifeless. A note found on a table told of the awful determination of the girl, a spoon from which she took the awful dose lay beside the note, which is the story of a most pitiable case and reads as follows:

"Dear Father and Brothers,—I can not be with you always. You all seem to think that I have disgraced you all. I think I will put a finishing touch on it all. I will my soul to God, and pray that you will all go to Heaven when you die, and I die forever. I hope people will be able to talk about me to their satisfaction when I am gone. Good-bye to all. God be merciful to me. LOTTIE."

From this it is plain to be seen that the girl had determined before hand to committ the deed. She was a bright, intelligent girl, but somewhat wilful girl and was particularly fond of dancing, and while at a gathering on Tuesday night, some person remarked to her that she should keep better company, referring to her escort, who is addicted to strong drink and even hinted her further exclusion from the society circle should this occur again.

The girl was of a very vivacious nature, and this is probably why she took so much to heart things she imagined had been said about her.

For some time past the girl had not resided at home, but preferred to work out and was employed in Havelock at the time of her death.

Coroner Gray considered, upon learning the full circumstances of the case, that an inquest was unnecessary.

The girl's remains were buried in Havelock on Tuesday.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

London Jan 15.—A novel method of rewarding regular attendance and at the same time encouraging thrift among young people has been adopted at Princes Risboro', Bucks. At the New Years' distribution of prizes in connection with the parish church Sunday school, instead of the most regular scholars being presented with medals, according to the custom hitherto observed, those children entitled to rewards were each given a post-office savings bank book, containing a "first" deposit of two shillings, and were urged to add to the sum out of their pocket-money. The innovation proved very popular.

KAISER'S BROTHER COMING

Prince Henry Will be in America Next Month

To Represent the Emperor at the Launching of His New Yacht Which Miss Roosevelt is to Christen—Kaiser and the President Exchange Cordial Letters

Berlin, Jan. 16.—Prince Henry of Prussia, brother of Emperor William, will sail early in February for New York, probably by a North German Lloyd steamship. He will represent the Emperor at the launching of the yacht which is now being built for him at Shooter's Island. The Imperial yacht Hohenzollern will also be sent over and will be at the launching.

Cordial messages were exchanged between Emperor William and President Roosevelt in regard to Prince Henry's visit. The Emperor's message to the President which was in English, reads:

"I am most gratified at your kind permission for Miss Roosevelt to perform the christening ceremony at the launch of my yacht. It gives me great pleasure to announce to you that I have ordered my yacht Hohenzollern to cross over and be present at the ceremony. My brother, Admiral Prince Henry of Prussia, will appear as my representative and will be able to express to you once more my sincere feelings of friendship for the United States and their illustrious head.

WILLIAM, I. R."

President Roosevelt's reply, which was in German, was as follows:

"Your Majesty's intention to send your yacht Hohenzollern to attend the christening by my daughter of your new yacht is a source of great pleasure and satisfaction to me. I can assure you of a hearty welcome for your brother, Admiral Prince Henry, to whom I shall personally express my sincere feelings of esteem for your Majesty, as well as my best wishes for the welfare of the German people.

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

Washington, Jan 16.—The announcement that Prince Henry will come to the United States on a visit is accepted in Washington as another indication of Emperor William's friendship for this country. It was only a short time ago that he selected Miss Alice Roosevelt to christen his private yacht being built in the United States.

The trouble in Venezuela naturally resulted in much talk about the Monroe Doctrine and the right of the United States to keep Germany out of South American waters. It was also followed by repeated statements that Germany was seeking to overthrow the principle of the Monroe Doctrine and secure a footing in South America. But when Germany came to the point where she desired to make a naval demonstration against the Castro Government Emperor William first gave complete and satisfactory assurances to the United States that he would fully respect the Monroe Doctrine.

He made it perfectly plain that his efforts to compel Venezuela to pay her debts were not in the interest of acquiring territory and satisfied the President on this point. The President is now particularly pleased to have Prince Henry visit the United States and every effort will be made to return in hospitality the friendship so recently displayed by Germany. Prince Henry will be the guest of the United States Government and will be lavishly entertained by President Roosevelt at the White House.

THE COMING STRUGGLE

It is not too much to say that the question of provincial prohibition is the most serious affecting provincial public life since the rebellion of 37. There are just now four parties in Ontario—the Straight Liberal, the Straight Conservative, the Straight Prohibitionist, the party made up of those who would be prohibitionists if they could assure themselves that the prohibitionist party was honest in its profession and likely to be honest in the enforcement of a prohibitory law. We shall call these the "Doubters." From what we saw of the silly hypocrisy of the Scott Act, and its pretended enforcement, we are inclined to think that, speaking from past experience, any honest attempt at enforcement of a prohibition law is extremely unlikely. If, therefore, the professions of the alleged prohibitionists are not convictions but mere theoretical vaporings, a sumptuary law of the kind proposed would be equivalent to the setting up of the brazen serpent by the children of Israel, and the defiance of all fear of God. The divine element—the divine searching of human hearts—seems to cut very little figure anyhow nowadays. The large majority of people (including many ministers) really seem to have forgotten the very existence of God. When we know what people intend to do, they appear to be honest and pass for such. If we knew that people might talk prohibition but that it was merely for effect and nothing more, we should likewise call them honest, because, as before, of our knowledge of their true intentions. But when men deliberately lie, whether demons or humans, we do not know whether or when they are honest, and it amounts to a perpetual and blighting system of deceit which will destroy in time all faith, all love, all sentiment whatsoever, and leave us without testimony of the love of Christ. What then? We may ask. We would suggest that until such time as the Drummonds, the Scotts and the other advocates of temperance farces enacted, and acted for the entertainment (and profit) of a few, are weeded out, and the community left clean and healthy, at least by so much that it is better to go slow, for that will mean sure. It used to be that temperance people had very little backbone. Their blood was to be too heavily diluted for real life. If so let not our time be wasted.

That Great and Noble Physician, Dr. Edward E. Phelps who Gave to the World

Paine's Celery Compound

His Marvellous Prescription Has Won a World-Wide Popularity.

Professor Edward E. Phelps, M.D., who gave to suffering humanity his marvellous medicine known as Paine's Celery Compound, has done more for the alleviation of pain and misery than any other physician that ever lived. His Paine's Celery Compound has proved a positive cure for wasting strength, sleeplessness, dyspepsia, stomach troubles, neuralgia, rheumatism, liver complaint, kidney disease and troubles resulting from poisoned and impure blood.

Paine's Celery Compound has given health and vigor to thousands in Canada. It must therefore, dear reader, possess ample virtues for your case. No other remedy has ever been so highly recommended by our doctors and best people. It has proved itself a lifesaver when all other remedies and prescriptions failed. Try it sufferer; one bottle will convince you that it has power to cure. All druggists sell it. [illegible] PAINE'S, the kind that cures.

ONE CERTAINTY

DIAMOND DYES

Are The Best and the Easiest to Use

No lady will knowingly buy or make use of worthless or imitation package dyes to color her garments or other valuable materials; the Diamond Dyes are her choice. There is one certainty established and sure: the Diamond Dyes are the best, strongest, brightest, fastest and easiest to use. Diamond Dyes are used to-day by millions in America, Europe, Australia, Asia and Africa, and are the only dyes that can give continued satisfaction. As there are some imitations, buyers should see that the name "Diamond" is on each package.

The Famous Maelstrom

(Norwegian letter in the Chicago "Record-Herald.")

We sailed through the famous maelstrom, which the ancients believed guards the entrance to the sublimest beauty of the fjords of the Lofoden Islands, and has furnished so much material for the imagination of the authors of Norwegian legendry and modern novelists. It is a reality—not one, but several maelstroms actually exist, and any of them will answer the descriptions given by Victor Hugo, Jules Verne, Edgar A. Poe and writers of lesser fame. The chief and most dangerous is an extraordinary whirlpool between the islands of Moskene and Roest, near the southern extremity of the Lofoden Archipelago. It is called Moskenaes-Strommen. Another, by the island of Vaero, called the Saelstrom, is almost as dangerous. There are many narrow channels between the mountains where great volumes of water, coming from opposite directions, meet as the tide flows in and out. They form temporary whirlpools twice a day, and during the spring tides, or when the natural currents are accelerated by heavy western gales, passage is impossible. No vessel could survive them. Even whales have been caught and whirled around until they were dead. Between times these channels look innocent enough. Even small boats can pass safely through them at the proper time each day, and the departure of the mail boats is regulated accordingly, but they have caused the loss of many lives. Boats have actually disappeared, being sucked into the vortex and carried to the bottom to whirl and whirl and whirl until the waters are tired and flow away, carrying the wrecks and the bodies of the dead with them on the undercurrent, to emerge miles and miles distant.

It is not strange that the ignorant and superstitious sailors of the Middle Ages attributed this mighty and mysterious action of the waters to supernatural power, and their imaginative minds, always creating monsters and miracles out of natural phenomena which they cannot understand, placed in them an octopus, whose awful arms were always extended to grasp unwary mariners who were so unfortunate as to come within his reach. Later writers and more intelligent represented the maelstrom as a vast caldron in which the waters revolve with terrific speed, their centrifugal force extending a long distance, and gradually drawing toward the center all who venture within their power. The mariners struggle and shriek in vain. The monster is inexorable, and when the crisis comes the vessel springs out of the water and then shoots suddenly down into the vortex, while the shrieks of terror and despair are drowned in the rushing of the hungry torrent and the howling of the winds.

The straits are very dangerous, and all vessels are warned to keep out of them. The notes upon the charts issued by the Norwegian hydrographic office say that "when the wind is steady at flood and ebb tide each day, the whirlpool is still for half an hour or more, when boats may then pass through, but half way between flood and ebb tide the passage becomes dangerous, although it can be used by steamers and large vessels, when there is no wind, for several hours a day. Toward the height of the tide, or when a gale is blowing, the water revolves with a speed of twenty-six miles an hour in mighty whirlpools, in which the largest steamers would be helpless."

Concerning King Solomon.

Several statesmen, a newspaper correspondent or two, and a deacon in one of Washington City's churches were discussing various subjects of more or less bearing on a game of poker which had been played earlier in the evening. It was merely a game for fun, out of deference to the deacon, or part of the evening would have been wasted in conversation, and the deacon surprised the assembly.

"Were any of you gentlemen aware," he said, "that King Solomon was a poker-player?"

"He couldn't have been the wisest man if he was," ventured a correspondent who is known for his bad luck.

"There is evidence that he was, just the same," insisted the deacon.

"Evidence or testimony?" queried a statesman, who is also a lawyer.

"What's the difference?" asked a correspondent.

"Testimony is a mere statement, and may be false or true; evidence is that by means of which a fact is established. See?"

"I'm—er," hesitated the deacon, "I guess all of you will admit Solomon's testimony as evidence."

"I'll admit it," said the lawyer.

"Well," exclaimed the deacon, "if you will consult the fourth verse of the tenth chapter of Proverbs, written by King Solomon, as announced in the first verse, you will find this statement: 'He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand; but the hand of the diligent maketh rich.' Now, what have you got to offer in rebuttal?"

And every man there admitted that Solomon evidently knew what he was talking about.—William J. Lampton.

TALL CORN

doesn't come by accident. A fertile soil and careful cultivation are necessary to produce the towering stems and heavy ears.

Yet the farmer who understands that he can't have a healthy corn crop without feeding and weeding, seems to think that he can have a healthy body without either care or culture. But the body is built up just as the corn is, by the assimilation of the several chemical elements on which vitality depends. And what weeds are to the corn, diseases of the stomach and nutritive systems are to the body; they divert the necessary food supply from the proper channels, and the body becomes lean, sickly and ill-nourished.

The proper digestion and assimilation of food is a primary essential of health. By healing diseases of the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery increases the digestive and assimilative powers, stimulates the action of the blood making glands, and sends to every organ of the body the rich red-corpuscled blood on which physical vigor and vitality depend.

"I took two bottles of Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, for stomach trouble," writes Clarence Carnes, Esq., of Taylorstown, Loudoun Co., Va. "It did me so much good that I didn't take any more. I can eat most anything now. I am so well pleased with it I hardly know how to thank you for your kind information. I tried a whole lot of things before I wrote to you. There was a gentleman told me about your medicine, how it had cured his wife. I thought I would try a bottle of it. Am now glad that I did, for I don't know what I would have done if it had not been for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate the bowels and cure constipation.

Asthma Cure Free

Asthmalene Brings Instant Relief and Permanent Cure in All Cases,

Sent ABSOLUTELY FREE on receipt of postal. Write your name and address plainly.

CHAINED FOR TEN YEARS

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-size bottle."

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER
Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.
NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO.:

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows at 130th street, New York. I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the 1st of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully,

O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle and I am ever grateful. I have a family of four children and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

HUSBAND AND FOE.

A NOVEL

some evil fiend! God could never let any man be so blackhearted and sinful. No; he is a fiend!

"I am his wife! —his wife!" she said over and over again to herself in a slow, meditative fashion. "I saved him from death—for what? That I should live in torture for ever after! Why did I do it?— why? why? why?"

She suddenly clenched her hands tightly together, and in her mad agony of mind, regardless of her lameness and weakness, she started forward to walk onward —anywhere, she cared not where.

"The wife of a murderer, a liar, a thief —his wife!" The words kept beat with her footsteps.

Day by day the full horror of what she had done had been creeping upon her; it reached its crisis now. Who could tell exactly what urged this? Perhaps some strange chord had been struck between Ormande's great love and hers — some vague, indefinite sense had come to show her what was, and what might have been.

Instinctively shrinking from meeting as few people as she possibly could, Katharine walked to a gate in the wall that led by a short route to the back of the house.

No one used this but the domestics and humbler inmates of the hall; she remembered, in a dull sort of way, that she could not come across any of the guests, and that it was teatime in the servants' quarters.

"I cry aloud for peace, and there is no peace!" the poor girl murmured to herself as she entered the gate and pushed it to behind her. "If —if I could find some comfort, some light in all this darkness and trouble! Oh, father! father! father! if you were only here now to help me, to tell me what to do!"

Weakened by her emotion and fatigue Katharine sank at the foot of a tree, and, burying her face in her hands, burst into a passion of tears. The vent was good for her; it eased the pain in her brows and throat; it was nature's remedy in this moment of mental torture.

The bitterness of the weeping over, Katharine was aroused to remember her position by the sound of the hall tower clock striking seven.

She rose to her feet, and, leaning back against the friendly tree, covered her burning eyes with her hands to give herself one more moment of rest before she took up her mask and role again. Buried in her confused thoughts, she did not hear the sound of approaching footsteps, and she started wildly as Miss Mostyn's clear rather shrill voice broke the silence.

"Pray, are you rehearsing for theatricals, Brereton?"

Katharine dropped her hands. There were deep blue marks round her glorious eyes and a few teardrops hung on the long lashes, but the stains of the weeping had vanished, leaving her only very white and wan. She saw at a glance that Miss Mostyn was in no pleasant frame of mind.

"A little comedy, evidently," she said, with a sneer, "The old story: a handsome young lord and a poor, misguided menial!"

Her light eyes were flashing furiously.

Katharine's pride rose.

"I am at a loss to understand you, madame," she said, very coldly.

Barbara clenched her gloves in her hands.

"Let there be no misunderstanding in the future, then," she answered, shrilly. "I allow no servant of mine to indulge in clandestine appointments with my gentlemen guests. How dare you?" —Barbara's jealousy lashed her temper still higher—"how dare you go to the station, meet Lord Otway, and walk away with him? You do not grasp your position at all clearly, Brereton. For the future I forbid you to go near the station, or anywhere outside the grounds, unless you have my permission; and if I find you trying to get up a flirtation———"

Katharine stopped her.

"That will do, Miss Mostyn," she said, quietly. "I think you will allow that, in anger, many things are said that in cooler moments one regrets. So it is with you now; your anger must be your only excuse for daring—yes, daring!" with a flash from her large eyes that somehow cowed Barbara strangely— "to say such things to me. I am sorry that Lady Drummond exerted any influence she had to get me into your household. It has been a mistake from the first, and so, Miss Mostyn, I beg to tender you my resignation, and to inform you that I shall leave Brexley Hall at the end of the month."

Katharine's quiet, cold, proud words were like fuel to the flame of Barbara's anger; but cunning— mean, low cunning— was distinctly one of Miss Mostyn's characteristics. Her suspicions had been suddenly aroused. It was not for nothing that she had immediately conceived a violent dislike for Katharine, dislike mingled with jealousy. When the wagonette had rolled up to the door, and the dog-cart followed, Miss Mostyn had gone forward to welcome her guest with a flutter at her cold, worldly heart. But all at once her flutter died away. Men there were, certainly, fashionable society men, but Lord Otway's handsome face was not among them, and in answer to her query whether any one had seen anything of him, she had been amazed, alarmed and maddened to hear from one of the young officers, with a sly laugh, that "Otway had suddenly espied a female form, draped in religious black, and had rushed after it, evidently preferring to walk with this form rather drive to the hall."

"And deuced good taste he has, too, though he is a parson, for I never saw a more lovely face in my life," Captain Derwent finished, briskly.

Barbara bit her lip, and was silent, but she waited her opportunity, and by and by escaped from the rest, and set off to walk and meet her errant knight, whose acceptance of her invitation had sent her into the seventh heaven of delight.

As she walked her anger rose.

A girl draped in black near the station—who could it be? She tortured her brain, but could not imagine, forgetting in that moment that Mrs. Trevanion had told her of Katharine's changed attire; was she after all going to be thwarted, and by some common creature in her own kingdom? Barbara almost tore her lace handkerchief to bits in her jealous anger; perhaps it was this girl who had brought him down to Brexley, and not she, Barbara, at all.

"Only let me find out," she said to herself, with a vicious, ugly look in her face, that was growing uncomfortably red, from the unusual exertion of walking on a rough country road in preposterously high-heeled French boots, "Only let me find out, and if I do not give her some misery it will not be my fault."

It took some little time to reach the lower gate, then all of a sudden her eyes fell on Katharine leaning against the tree in that attitude of weakness and despair, and Barbara knew better than if any one had told her that her rival was before her.

Infuriated by anger and jealousy, she went up to the girl, and we know how and in what manner she addressed Katharine, the quiet way in which Katharine answered, and the mere suggestion of losing this rival now that she was in her power roused all Barbara's slyness and cunning.

Katharine must not be allowed to go if—and how her cold eyes flamed at the thought— if she could but find out whether Katharine loved Lord Otway. What a chance of revenge was open to her! Yes, but that chance would be gone if Katharine were allowed to leave the hall.

As Katharine ceased and drew herself up proudly, after offering her resignation, Barbara was silent for a moment, then in a low voice, as if overcome with emotion, she suddenly said:—

"No, no; I cannot let you go! I—I am sorry for what I have said, Miss Brereton." Then, as Katharine drew back, almost too astonished for words, she went on with an artful break in her voice: "What a miserable, awful temper I have! Ah! see what it is to be alone in the world, with no father or mother's hand to guide one; always flattered and pampered for the sake of my money; with not one single real friend to tell me my faults and to help to crush them. Please forgive me, Miss Brereton; I have been very rude to you. Yes, I know I have; but I have been spoilt all my life. I am not really bad; indeed, I am not. Won't you forgive me, please?"

Katharine hesitated. There was a ring of sincere contrition and penitence in Barbara's voice that touched her noble, generous heart to the quick.

"I forgive you, yes, Miss Mostyn," she said gently, and with a weary little sigh, "though your words pained me deeply."

"What did I say?" Barbara clasped her hands in mock dismay. "Oh! I remember. Something about Lord Otway, wasn't it? Oh, well, I know you will forgive that, too. I went to meet Lord Otway, and when I saw him talking to you in the distance"—Barbara uttered this lie glibly —"it made me get into one of my sad, wicked tempers, you know," she added, with a well assumed air of frankness. "Dear Lord Otway is one of my very best friends, and you never told me you were acquainted with him, you funny child!"

"I did not think of it," Katharine answered, simply, her pride thawing gradually beneath the warm, pleasant manner Barbara had adopted.

"No, no, of course not." Barbara drew her thin lips still tighter across her white teeth, longing to strike this girl's face with any weapon that would destroy its beauty utterly and forever. "That was very natural, and, of course, I was just a little surprised to see you together, but"—she paused, and then held out her hand with a smile—"but you must forget all I have said to you, Miss Brereton. I have a great deal on my mind, and once this fete is over I shall be different. I like you so much—so very much. You will not leave me, will you? If you only knew how badly I want a friend."

Again there was an artful break in the cold, shrill voice, and Katharine was won entirely.

"If I can be a friend to you," she began.

Barbara uttered a little exclamation, and then suddenly lifting herself on her toes, she kissed Katharine's pale face with a Judas kiss.

"If—ah! then you relent, you forgive me!—you will remain to be a comfort, dear?" with another kiss; "how can I thank you?"

Katharine looked bewildered for a moment; but quick to sympathize and to receive sympathy, she flung her arms about Barbara's tight-laced figure.

"Love me!" she murmured, fervently, feeling that in her greatest hour of tribulation this girl had come to be a comfort to her, to soothe her wretched, anguish-torn mind. "Love me, only love me!" she said earnestly. "I, too, am alone in the world. I, too, need a friend. Give me your love, dear Miss Mostyn, and I shall be thankful, indeed."

An hour later Miss Mostyn was in the hands of her two maids. As the delicate pink muslin gown was removed, she suddenly put her foot on it.

"Throw it into the fire," she commanded Olympe sharply; "I shall never wear it again!"

"She put her common arms round me," she mused viciously to herself, thinking of Katharine. "That indignity shall be repaid with all my other debts to her— when the moment comes!"

And then she prepared a gorgeous toilette, destined to snare and attract Lord Otway that evening, while Katharine, alone in her room, was offering grateful thanks to the Providence who at this moment of sorrow had sent her such a friend as Barbara Mostyn.

CHAPTER XIV.

A message was brought to Katharine as she sat in the twilight.

"If Miss Brereton was not too tired, would she kindly go down later on to the ball-room, as Miss Mostyn would like her to play some waltzes."

Patty delivered the message at the same time that she carried up Miss Brereton's dinner, for as yet Katharine had never joined the others for this meal, and she could not repress a tiny sigh of envy as she gave it.

"P'raps you'll dance, too, miss," she said.

Katharine smiled a wan smile.

"You forget I am lame, Patty; besides, I shall never dance again!"

"Lor', miss, what a thing to say! 'Never dance again!' You so beautiful and so young! Why, you've got all your life as yet to dance in!"

The maid's brisk chatter was lost on Katharine. She was standing by the open window, thinking and thinking.

The more she recalled Lord Otway's words, the more frightened and horrified she was. The mention of Gordon's name was like a black shadow on her already gloomy path.

How?— how had he become acquainted with Ormande? and how had he the courage, the diabolical wickedness, to utter such lies to one so frank, so noble, so good as Ormande was?

"Has he no fear? Does he not dread that all may be discovered? I seem to be linked with him in this wrong. If— if he is so bold now, will he not be bolder, will he not drag me forward, too? Oh! what shall I do?"

And then the memory of Barbara's kind words returned to her to soothe her.

"At all events, I have the comfort of knowing I am safe here for a time. Thank Heaven, she has shown herself as she really is— a wayward, lovable, spoilt child— that she has begged me to remain. Had she not done so, I must have gone, for in her anger she said such terrible things." The color flamed into her pale cheeks for an instant, and then died away. "I must be patient with her, and forgive her everything, for— for Ormande's sake. I must remember that it is she whom he loves, she who will be his wife. Heaven grant it may be given me to help her to be worthy of him, to elevate her up to his level. He— he deserves a good, noble wife, and if it lies in my power I will give her to him!"

"I will give her to him," she repeated; then suddenly she flung out her hands with a gesture of despair, and, crouching down, buried her face on the cushioned seat of the window-ledge. "My love— my dear, dear love! And I sent you from me today; I spoke harshly; you will never know what it cost me, dear. I am a lonely, sorrowful girl, and you speak to me gently, comforting me as you comfort all that are sad and lonely. You do not guess how I long to cling to your dear strong hands; how I have to tear the very heart out of my breast and put my foot upon it. No, no, you will never know this; you will go on your way, you will marry her whom you have blessed with your love, while— I shall live on, lonely, sad, broken- hearted to the end."

Even Barbara's malicious jealous hatred would have been satisfied with this paroxysm of despairing misery could she have witnessed it, but Barbara was downstairs flitting about from one to another of her guests, laughing airily.

She was very warm and gentle in her manner to Lord Otway, but she did not single him out for more attention than the rest, although there was not a soul present who did not know how eagerly she was working to be the future countess of Thanecourt and Ormande's wife. It was more than evident that Ormande had some deep mental problem taxing his mind and brain, and though it gave her a smart pain to permit the suggestion to live for one moment, Barbara Mostyn felt certain that Katharine was connected with that problem in some way.

"I will watch them— she will be down directly, and I will watch them," she said to herself, while she smiled her hard metallic smile and talked on in her shrill, high tones. "If I find out that it is true, I fancy Miss Brereton will be sorry she ever crossed my path."

And out loud Barbara was saying with as much softness as she could put into her unsympathetic voice.

"Now we will go into the ball-room; we are going to have an impromptu dance. Lord Otway, please promise not to be shocked by our frivolity. I have asked my new friend and companion to come down and play waltzes for us, she is such a nice girl, such a pretty girl," this with an artless glance around the room. "I am sure you will all agree with me on that point, and I want you all to be very kind to her, for she will be shy and strange at first, I expect. Ah, here she is."

The drawing- room door had opened very quietly, and Katharine walked easily, gracefully and with that dignity of carriage that Ormande declared to himself with a wild throb at his heart made her a queen over all other women.

The men without one exception were thunderstruck at the beauty of the girl who came toward them in a simple gown of black soft clinging stuff while the ladies were horrified and annoyed at finding themselves so easily eclipsed.

"Shy and strange," Barbara had said, but there was neither shyness nor awkwardness discernible in Katharine.

Lady Clara Lennox, a faded blonde, surveyed the girl through her long, gold- handled glasses.

"Not a flower or even a brooch to relieve the dress, and yet— yet"—her ladyship allowed this most ruefully—"she looks superb! It is only such a lovely woman as she who dare risk all that sombre black."

And then Lady Clara glanced at her hostess, who was attired in the very latest Parisian fashion, and who— diamonds, laces, silks, nevertheless— was absolutely nowhere beside this girl with the pure, pale face, the marvelous eyes and exquisite head.

Mrs. Trevanion fidgeted in her chair. She was not clever, and she did not like Katharine, and she was hoping that Barbara would say or do something to shake Miss Brereton out of her graceful, statuesque ease.

But Miss Mostyn for once disappointed her aunt in this respect. She laughed on; and then with a gesture she waved the party to follow her across the hall to the ball- room, which was being extensively decorated for the great day of the fete.

As she passed Katharine, Barbara stopped.

"You have brought your music, dear; that is right. Will you come with us?"

At least four of the men made a step forward to take the pile of music from Katharine's hand, but Lord Otway was first, and his face flushed with a delight that would come, as, for one instant, his fingers touched the velvety softness of her fair arm.

"Are you rested?" he asked, in quick, low tones; but Captain Derwent, who had lagged behind, eager to get an introduction to Katharine, somehow heard the words, and a curious look came into his eyes as he at once recognized in this black-robed form the fac-simile of the one who had evidently held such powerful attraction for Ormande earlier in the day.

Some of Roosevelt's Views.

In expressing his political views and experiences Colonel Roosevelt's pen is a trenchant one. Here are some extracts from his political essays and lectures which demonstrate the truth of that statement, are fair samples of his style and also show the trend of the man's mind pretty clearly:

"I wish to preach, not the doctrine of ignoble ease, but the doctrine of the strenuous life; the life of toil and effort, of labor and strife; to preach that highest form of success which comes, not to the man who desires mere easy peace, but to the man who does not shrink from hardship, or from bitter toil, and who, out of these, wins the splendid, ultimate triumph." —Speech at the Hamilton Club, Chicago, April, 1899.

"The successful man, whether in business or politics, who has risen by a conscienceless swindling of his neighbors, by deceit and chicanery, by unscrupulous boldness and unscrupulous cunning, stands toward society as a dangerous wild beast. The mean and cringing admiration which such a career commands among those who think crookedly or not at all makes this kind of success perhaps the most dangerous of all the influences that threaten our national life. Our standard of public and private conduct will never be raised to the proper level until we make the scoundrel who succeeds feel the weight of a hostile public opinion even more strongly than the scoundrel who fails."— "Latitude and Longitude Among Reformers."

"Money is a good thing. It is a foolish affectation to deny it. But it is not the only good thing, and after a certain amount has been amassed it ceases to be the chief even of material good things. It is far better, for instance, to do well a bit of work which is well worth doing."—Speech to Young Men, December 21st, 1900.

"Practical politics must not be construed to mean dirty politics. In the long run the politics of fraud and treachery and foulness are unpractical politics, and the most practical of all politicians is the politician who is clean and decent and upright. But a man who goes into the actual battles of the political world must prepare himself much as he would for the struggle in any other branch of our life. He must be prepared to meet men of far lower ideals than his own, and to face things, not as he would wish them, but as they are. He must not lose his own high ideal, and yet he must face the fact that the majority of the men with whom he must work have lower ideals. He must stand firmly for what he believes, and yet he must realise that political action, to be effective, must be the joint action of many men, and that he must sacrifice somewhat of his own opinions to those of his associates if he ever hopes to see his desires take practical shape.

"The prime thing that every man who takes an interest in politics should remember is that he must act and not merely criticize the actions of others. It is not the man who sits by his fireside reading his evening paper and saying how bad our politics and our politicians are who will ever do anything to save us; it is the man who goes out into the rough hurly-burly of the caucus, the primary and political meeting, and there faces his fellows on equal terms."

"Of all the forces that tend for evil in a great city like New York probably none are so potent as the sensational papers. Until one has had experience with them it is difficult to realise the reckless indifference to truth or decency displayed by papers such as the two that have the largest circulation in New York city. Scandal forms the breath of the nostrils of such papers and they are quite as ready to create as to describe it. To sustain law and order is humdrum, and does not really lend itself to flaunting woodcuts; but if the editor will stoop, and make his subordinates stoop, to raking the gutters of human depravity, to upholding the wrongdoer and furiously assailing what is upright and honest, he can make money, just as other types of pander make it. The man who is to do honorable work in any form of civic politics must make up his mind (and if he is a man of properly robust character he will make it up without difficulty) to treat the assaults of papers like these with absolute indifference and to go his way unheeding. Indeed, he will have to make up his mind to be criticised, sometimes justly and more often unjustly, even by decent people, and he must not be so thin-skinned as to mind such criticism overmuch."

Public Peculation in Latin Countries.

A well-known Italian diplomatist, who has only recently left London to exchange his post for a more important one, told me a couple of years ago that, with very few exceptions, Italian ministers—as distinct from diplomatists—all "feather their nests," or at least endeavor to do so. Consequently, when a Disraeli, a Guizot, or a Jules Simon dies poor, his poverty is not only accounted a wonder, but a virtue, by almost every French, Italian and Spanish journalist. To the very small number of statesmen of the so-called Latin nations thus distinguished must be added the name of Francesco Crispi. The fact of his demise in peculiarly straitened circumstances has been so prominently brought forward in France, Italy and Spain as to tempt English scribes still further to emphasise this rare, not to say extraordinary, evidence of the honesty of a great—or reputedly great—statesman of quasi-Latin origin.

The Small Boy's Poser.

Charles derived little good from his visit to Sunday school yesterday. After dinner mamma missed a small pot of jam, and as she noticed some telltale evidences about Charles's mouth and hands, she asked him if he had seen or eaten the jam. Charles insisted that he had not even seen the jam. Papa thereupon was called in, and Charles was punished severely. Drawing Charles close to her, and wiping the tears from his eyes, mamma said: "When I was your age, my boy, I never told a falsehood." "How old were you before you began?" asked Charles, between sobs.—Albany "Journal."

Anxious Father (from top of stairs)—Say, Mary Jane! Mary Jane—Yes, papa. "Is it eleven o'clock yet?" "Yes, papa." "Well, give the young man my compliments, and ask him to kindly close the front door from the outside."—Chicago "Daily News."

A Story of Charles Frederic Goss.

Recently a Chicago newspaper man paused before a bookstore window which was heaped high with copies of The Redemption of David Corson, and he said to his companion:

"There is one instance, at least, in which lightning struck in the right place. If the size of an author's heart determined the measure of his success every book written by Charles Frederic Goss would sell a million copies.

"When I struck Chicago I had neither job nor prospect of one. There was not a man in the whole big city who knew me, and it didn't take many days of knocking about from one newspaper office to another to convince me that not a human being here cared to know me. But that was where I made my mistake. One night I happened to step inside Mr. Moody's Chicago Avenue Church. Mr. Charles Frederic Goss was in charge of the work, and at the close of the services I met him. He passed over the conventional revivalistic questions regarding my spiritual condition, but quickly found out where I was stopping, and that I was looking for work and had met with disappointment in my applications. From that hour I felt that I certainly had one friend in Chicago—and he a very cheerful one.

"Week after week passed, and finally a month and a half, before I secured my first position. In the latter part of that probationary period I was in constant terror of the day of reckoning that was to come with my landlady, to whom I had not paid a dollar. Strangely enough, however, she never mentioned the matter or suggested that I find some other place. My credit appeared to be as firm as that of the bank cashier at my right, who paid his board every Saturday night, before the whole company, handing out crisp bills as he took his seat at the table.

"Finally, when I was able to pay her I spoke of the unaccountable forbearance she had shown me as a stranger.

"'Oh, I knew you were all right,' she replied. 'Mr. Goss came here to the house and talked with me about you. Any boarder who has him for a friend can let his bills run with me as long as he needs.'

"All this time the author of David Corson had been keeping my courage up by assuring me there was a place for every honest man who had a desire to work; but he had never so much as hinted that he had personally established my credit at the boarding-house where I was in arrears.

"He always gave away a large share of his salary, and was never so happy as when helping some person in desperate circumstances. In his college course he had a great battle to retain his grasp on the faith which had been taught him in boyhood. This struggle can be traced very distinctly in the pages of his novel."

A Heated Discussion.

"At this point," said the narrator, "she broke down and wept scalding tears." "My goodness!" exclaimed the listener, "she must have been boiling over with rage."—Chicago "News."

Man's Self-Conceit.

If the wonders of the exhibition which Glasgow has made so successful, have begot any general sense of pride in the achievements of mankind, and particularly of those pushing and ingenious folk who dwell in the City by the Clyde, a perusal of Professor Rucker's speech at the meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science in the Scottish metropolis, will prove a wholesome corrective, says the "Outlook." He wound up his remarks with the confession that, "with all our searchings, we have not torn the veil of mystery from the world around us." There is nothing so true, and nothing so salutary to remember. Mankind tends evermore to self-conceit; that tendency is encouraged by the daily newspaper. Perhaps some physicist in his researches blunders on some simple property of matter, or condition of the forces about us, and the Roentgen rays are the result. Immediately arises in the press a shriek of exultation. One would think at such times that Nature was about to open out her heart and reveal all her mysteries. But the only fact in the matter appears to be that the human intellect is not fit to comprehend the nature of things. The nature of things is all about us; it only remains mysterious to us because of our incapacity to grasp it. As Professor Rucker reminds us, the span of human life is a very short time in which to study the manifestations of Nature. If we lived longer the problems would appear different. Nor can we transmit our individual knowledge. Each person has to begin at the beginning; he is the slave of his faculties, which, very evidently, were not intended to grasp all at once the character of the universe. The most profound thinkers and investigators know best how ignorant man is. Professor Rucker follows a long line of presidents in reminding us that we know practically nothing.

The Arts of Childhood.

"We hear a good deal these days about the lost arts," said the man who, though old in years, is still young at heart. "I wonder if the world realizes that some of the most precious arts of childhood are in danger of becoming extinct? How many boys today can make a kite, properly hung and with a tail sufficient to balance, the ends nicely bent and worked down with a bit of broken glass? I interviewed my young nephew the other day, and was thunderstruck to discover that he knew nothing about it. Could he make a water-wheel, a windmill, an elder pop-gun, a jack-lantern, a buzz-wheel, an air-gun from a goose-quill, with a sliced potato for ammunition, a willow whistle, a squirt-gun? No; he knew nothing about them. 'But surely,' said I, almost pathetically, 'you can make a cornstalk fiddle?' 'Do you mean a violin, unk?' said he, yawning. Then I gave it up. I don't believe the youths of to-day know enough to stick a feather in a corncob and throw it into the air. I am going to write a book some day upon the arts of childhood to save them from utter annihilation."—Detroit "Free Press."

Passenger cars (or coaches, as they are usually designated) in early days were simply stage coach bodies mounted on four wheels, and as time progressed several were linked together, thus forming a "train."

Wood pulp paper as military clothing is used by the Japanese troops. It is marvelously tough, and has an appearance that might well be regarded with satisfaction for summer wear. It holds stitching uncommonly well while its warmth is undoubted.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Many Being Vaccinated

There is nothing new in the smallpox situation whatever. The patient at Jackson park is doing nicely and no fresh cases have been reported.

The Nicholls hospital and the house on Aylmer street which have been under quarantine for the past thirteen days will, it is expected, be relieved today.

A number of rumors are afloat, to the effect that a number of people are very sick, and that one or two deaths have occurred from the effects of the vaccination. These rumors are entirely false, some people have sore arms but no deaths have occured yet, and not even a case of serious illness has been reported.

The doctors are still in attendance at the Town Council chamber to issue certificates of successful vaccination to those who were treated last week, and on whom the vaccine has taken and also to vaccinate any who present themselves for the treatment.

The doctors who will be on duty today are:

10 to 11 a.m.—Dr. Boucher and Dr. Halliday.
11 to 12 noon—Dr. McClelland and Dr. McNulty.
2 to 3 p.m.—Dr. Gray and Dr. McCullough.
3 to 4 p.m.—Dr. Greer and Dr. Eastwood.
4 to 5 p.m.—Dr. [illegible] and Dr. [illegible].

Another Recruit

Col-Sergt. Tom Mulligan received a letter from his brother Sam from Halifax yesterday in which he stated that he had been taken on the strength of the Canadian Mounted Rifles and would sail with them on Tuesday last in the transport Manhattan.

Sam has been very anxious to go to Africa and applied here to be taken on and when he found he could not get a place, he made arrangements to go, and secured a position in a vessel that was carrying horses.

We are pleased to hear that Sam has been able to join the regiment as he was determined to go, and will make a good soldier. His many friends in town will wish him a good voyage and a safe return.

Hunt Club's Supper

Last night about fifteen members of the Eagle Lake Hunt Club assembled at the Palace Restaurant and partook of a most enjoyable oyster supper. The tables were loaded with good things and after the oysters had been cleared up, Captain Fitzgerald occupied the floor and delivered a speech about 27 feet long, in the course of which he said that his company had shown what kind of stuff they were made of. He thought from the manner they put oysters, celery, etc., out of sight that the party had proved themselves to be as good at the table as they were at the target. He was sorry to notice that the Gold Lake Club were not present and he thought they were afraid to come as the Eagle Lakers would beat them eating oysters as well as shooting.

The referee has given the decision that the Eagle Lakers are champions of the district, both as rifle shots and oyster eaters.

A Painful Accident

Mr. W. J. Northey, of Smith, met with with a very painful accident while working in the woods on Tuesday. While he was engaged in cutting the branches off a tree, a cedar twig ran into his ear. He pulled the twig out but fancied from the continued pain, that some part still remained. The pain increased and Mr. Northey decided to drive to town where Dr. McCullough attended the injured organ and removed the remaining portion of the twig. The drum of the ear had been punctured, making the operation very painful. Mr. Northey still complains of a very painful ear.

Officers Installed

At the regular meeting of Peterborough Lodge, No. 15, A.O.U.W., on Tuesday night the following officers were installed by Bro. McCaughey, D.D.G.M., Workman, assisted by members of the lodge.

After the regular business of the lodge had been disposed of the officers and members present adjourned to Bro. Harry Long's to partake of an oyster supper. The refreshments were served in his usual excellent manner by Mr. Long.

PRICE PER POUND

How Much is Good Solid Flesh Worth?

When a little tot that can hardly talk plain calls out for Grape-Nuts before she gets up from the bed in the morning there must be something pleasing about the food.

Her father says, "I can safely say that every pound of Grape-Nuts used in my family has been worth a dollar in gold to me. To illustrate: About five years ago I was ill and rundown from 155 pounds to 130. After I got so I could get about, my stomach troubled me and I never could get above 135 pounds although I tried all kinds of food.

Finally I was put on Grape-Nuts and kept it up for eight months. I realised I was fleshing up again and when weighed found I had recovered my 155 pounds. I have since been able to hold my own. My stomach is in fine condition.

My family all eat Grape-Nuts and are all improved in health. Even my little tot who can hardly talk calls for Grape-Nuts before she is out of bed in the morning.

I stand for nothing but what is right and honest, and I am quite willing you should print my name if you choose to publish this letter." F. A. Brainard, Binghamton, N. Y., No. 6 Gold St.

A PRESENTATION

Rev. Father Casey Presented with Fur Collar and Gauntlets Last Night

The rooms of St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society was the scene of a very pleasing and enjoyable affair last night, being the occasion of the presentation of a beautiful set of furs consisting of an otter collar and gauntlets to Ven. Archdeacon Casey by the members of the T. A. S. and the young ladies' Sodality of St. Peter's. Two neatly worded addresses were read, in which the members of these societies expressed their hearty congratulations to the Rev. Father on receiving the appointment to the Lindsay parish, and at the same time expressing their sorrow at losing one who has always taken such a heartfelt interest in the advancement of the young people of the parish.

Father Casey made a feeling reply to the addresses, in which he expressed his regret at leaving them, but assured his hearers that he would ever take a deep interest in the progress of the T.A.S. and the young ladies' Sodality.

After speeches by several other gentlemen the meeting broke up after singing the National Anthem.

LAST NIGHT'S OPERA

The Flaming Arrow Presented Last Night —A Great Success.

The opera house was well filled last night by an interested and appreciative audience, to witness Lincoln Carter's new play, "The Flaming Arrow" which was one of the best performances given here for a long time.

The programme introduced many new features, one special feature being the introduction of Go-Wan-Go, the first Indian actress on the stage. At one o'clock the company's band, consisting chiefly of Indians, paraded the streets and made things lively. The leader, representing a U.S. cavalry trumpeter was a marvel, being the best trumpeter ever listened to in town. The company will go from here to Port Hope, Cobourg, Oshawa, Belleville and Brockville.

Why Catarrh is Fatal

Because it pours a flood of poisons into the circulation that saps strength and digestion so materially as to render the body incapable of resisting disease, and consumption is the result. Catarrh is quickly cured by Catarrhozone, a fragrant germ destroying vapor that goes to the root of the disease. It soothes and heals the inflamed mucous surfaces, clears the head and throat, and positively never fails to perfectly cure Bronchitis, Asthma or Catarrh. Nothing is so good for disease of the respiratory organs as Catarrhozone. Large outfit $1. Small size 25c. Druggists or by mail from Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

LAKEHURST

The General meeting of the Harvey Agricultural Society was held on Wednesday, Jan. 8th, at 3, p.m., when the following officers were elected for 1902.

President,—John Smith.
Vice-President,—W T Elliott.
Sec.-Treasurer,— J W Irwin.
Directors,—W Irwin, Jas. McGuire, N G Nesbitt, J O Weir, A Wilson, jr., Alex. Thompson, Robt. Tedford, A G. Shearer, W. Clarkson.
Auditors,—J. Elliott and Wm. Weir.

—The Farmer's Institute meeting wasn't what might be called a success. The attendance was small— in fact the audience scarcely exceeded the speakers. But the lecture I am told were much appreciated.

—Mr. John Weir paid a visit to Apsley last Saturday.

—Mr. and Mrs. Cundal left for their new home in Cameron last Monday. All their Harvey friends wish them success.

—Mr. John Weir left for Peterborough last Tuesday to attend Peterborough Business College.

Malt Breakfast Food

Trims the Sails of Health.

It often happens that men and women apparently vigorous to-day, may to-morrow be irritable and out-of sorts owing to some little stomach derangement. We should remember that while we are vigorous we can keep so by using food that regulates digestion.

We should trim the sails of health and vigor by regular use of Malt Breakfast Food each morning, thereby overcoming any tendency to flatulency, sour stomach, waterbrash and miserable digestion.

Malt Breakfast Food perfectly aids digestion, and keeps up a standard of strength necessary for continued good health. There is no other breakfast food known to science so delicious, refreshing and sustaining for body and nerves. The use of one package will convince you of its superiority over all other foods. Grocers everywhere.

OMEMEE.

—The good sleighing causes business to be improved. Large quantities of wood and grain are going to Peterborough market. An unusual amount of stock is being shipped and high prices are paid for grain. Farmers are the independent people, yet some are retiring, too large rents from tenements.

—A large number of Manitoba visitors are here, who have been as a general thing most successful, and will not return before March.

—Farmers' Institute meeting here on Wednesday 15th, bids fair to attract a large crowd. The Messrs. Clancey, the popular vocalist, will sing at the evening session.

—Johnston, the horse dealer of Manitoba will offer western horses for sale here on Wednesday.

—The Presbyterian services were very largely attended, last sabbath being an unusual large number of communicants.

—Jas. Graham and W. Clancey, the two Peterborough hotel proprietors are representedly doing a good business here and their houses orderly and well kept.

—What promises to be one of the most popular entertainments ever held here is the Pauline Johnston and McCrae, on next Tuesday evening, Jan 21, under the auspices of the Canadian Order Woodmen of the World, which flourishes here. Deputations of the society are expected to be present from Lindsay and Peterborough.

Miserable Folks could trace both state of mind and body to some one or other form of stomach disorder. Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablet is a "vest pocket" remedy that nature provides and that medical science has proved a wonder in preventing and curing stomach ailments. If you've a symptom of distress in your stomach test the Pineapple cure. 35 cents.—130 Sold by H. H. [illegible].

Most Perfect Stove Made
THE
Patented March 10th, 1894,
BY
Geo. Brousseau,
Quebec.

For hard and soft coal, coke or peat. The only stove without grate and possessing a tube for gas escape.

DESCRIPTION

The Star is the latest and best stove in the market for slow combustion—why? The inside is lined with fire brick all in one piece and cemented to the outer shell. No danger of breaking or loss of pieces.

The Star has a tube behind for the escape of the gas. As anyone who uses soft coal knows, the gas accumulates under the fresh coal, and if there is no escape there will be explosions and puffs of smoke. In the Star this disappears in the gas escape. The Star has a sliding damper and ornamental door of mica.

After being filled, the Star will heat for 48 hours without attention. It will hold fire and give out heat longer than any other stove.

The Star is 25 per cent more economical than any other stove.

MORE THAN 4,000 ARE IN USE IN THE LOWER PROVINCES.

PRICE LIST.

No.	Height.	Diameter.	Price
0	24½ in.	8 in.	$11.20
1	29½ in.	9 in.	12.00
2	34 in.	10½ in.	14.00
3	37½ in.	12 in.	16.20
4	41 in.	16 in.	25.00

DIRECTIONS.

When filling the stove always shut the draft door at the bottom.

Keep the small opening in the back pipe closed except when cleaning.

Clean the back pipe every two weeks.

Coal Consumers, Attention!

We certify that we have in use one No. 3 "Star" stove in our large pool and billiard room the size of which is 45 by 25 feet, with 14 foot ceiling. We have perfect heat, and the most coal we have used on the coldest day yet has been 3 scuttles in twenty-four hours. We are so well pleased with the stove that we would not use any other.

ROCAMORA & CALLAHAN.

I have been using a No 3 STAR stove in the sitting room at the City Hotel for some time past, and it has proved so satisfactory that I have ordered two more to replace two stoves in the upstairs. The Star gives more heat than the other stoves with half the amount of coal.

MARTIN CONNORS.

We have in use in our Composing Room a No. 3 Star coal stove and wish to state that it is giving eminent satisfaction. The entire absence of gas by the escape provided, the increase of heat and the saving in coal are special features of the Star, and it requires a minimum of attention.

SOUTH AFRICAN MINING SHARES

London Directors, F. Bruch, C. J. Palmer and D. Symons. London Secretary H. L. Claridge. The company was registered October 2nd, 1895, under the laws of the Transvaal, and holds upwards of 2,000 claims in the districts of Klerksdorp and Potchefstroom. The authorized capital is £600,000 in shares of £1, of which £500,000 has been issued and paid up. The accounts are made up annually to August 31st, and submitted in Johannesburg about November. In a circular issued in November, 1899, it was stated that the company had then in London cash and liquid assets for £110,000 besides holding 62,000 shares of £1 in the Main Reef West Company, Ltd. No report was received last year but this notice has been officially revised. A register of shares is kept in London.

Advices from London predict a substantial rise in "Klerksdorp", the present price being 15 shillings as against a price of £3 15 s. before the war.

100 shares of this stock at 15 shillings per share—$365.62: 20 per cent of which is $73.12, balances carried at 6 per cent.

We buy and sell either for cash or on 20 per cent margin.

Write for our booklet on South African mines, which will be ready about the end of the month. As only a limited number will be issued they will be mailed in the order in which applications are received. It will contain a great deal of information and will be a useful reference book.

Quotations received daily by cable.
